Found this on the Photoshop Phriday thread at http://www.SomethingAwful.com.

It's a bit of fun, lol. Just thought I'd share the fact C&C still plays an important role in many things

According to most XWIS players it is spelt "Nob"

If you notice, all the letters in there are capitalized, not just Nod. So the "It's Nod, not NOD" argument is moot.

Why do you ask a question like that if you see people that care about how Nod is spelled?

And your point has what bearing on mine? If I was the only one who cared, then you wouldn't be here responding.

Go crawl back under your rock until you start making some sense.

Nod, not NOD, because NOD is an acronym, whereas Nod is a normal word.

The City of Negligible Overbearing Do-gooders!

(or any other acronym you can think of)

Ugh.. my point wasn't to start the spam, but to point out why there is the difference to isolated words in capital letters, and words with proper casing.

I concur, and if we're talking about the subject title , well then why focus on Nod, City is also capitalised

Shouldn't it be Aircraft Destroyer, aircrafts not being living things. Altough it being a nickname, it could have been anything.

When you turn on Caps Lock it is not proper to turn it off in the event of hitting a proper noun. Yes, that kind of shit happens seemingly on IRC because most autocompletes don't check for your Caps Lock activation, I know, but the point still stands.

I HOPE NOBODY EVER FORGETS THE ATTACKS ON America ON September THE 11TH 2001!

See, just doesn't work right.

Who's got stairs in their house, anyway?

Just for the record, I don't give a shit, just wanted to beat ack to it.

But technically yes it is Nod, but the poster and therefor the post title quoted from the poster are both fine imo as it is just a capitilisation of the words city and Nod for effect.
