They should ban Alkaline...lol...he starts too much trouble by resetting bans...lol

<http://unclanforum.proboards16.com/index.cgi?board=junk&action=display&thread=1150657077&page=3>

Ok, here is what I have to say on the subject:

1, Read the Language policy for newmaps, it still reflects what I have to say about the server. Renbattle was worse much worse. Now their is only kicks for language after you receive warning and direct attacks on UN. Ofcourse this isn't always enforced, hence the resetting of bans every 2 weeks (SOMETHING NO OTHER SERVERS DO)... mistakes happen we are all people...

Maybe tthom should demand Alk make the policy bans are reset every two weeks, and put back as soon as possible just to screw with you and make you think we care...lol

I'm sorry you all feel that way. Though I'm not on a lot anymore, in the past (pre-RG), UN had to deal with A LOT of cheaters. Half of any map we ever played was spent proving people had BH (most did) or FinalRen or some other crap. I mean, it was like a second job. A lot of that caution has carried over till now, with bypass hacks and all.

I hear a lot of hate for tthom, and thats a real shame. tthom is one of the nicest guys you'll ever meet. If he's wronged you somehow, and it was a legitimate mistake, he'll bust his tail to get you back in our servers. But he won't take BS from anybody, nor should he have to. The guy pays half of our server expenses.

As for the other mods, there's only so much control we have over them. But we pick people that play a lot and have our trust. But for as many people that have complained that our mods are too strict, we have just as many saying that there aren't enough mods on to regulate things when they play. Again, if you have a legitimate complaint, we will handle it as best we can. Its hard to please everyone.

No one in UN will claim we are perfect, nor do we expect anyone else to claim that, yet all we hear are complaints that we aren't running a tight ship over in our servers. But hey, if our servers are as bad as some people seem to think, then why are people upset about being banned from there?

His point is that hes been banned for RG bypassing when he hasn't...which means hes entitled to say it..

I don't see how pride has anything to do with it.

UN don't claim to be perfect..fair enough but banning people from IRC and NOT being in the game themselves is pretty stupid really.

For example, me and my clanmate where in the normal map gsa server, it was city flying(hes good in an apache), he manages to kill all the orcas after a while and some low skilled player complains thats hes cheating, then Fooker bans him from IRC. Good job UN.

The UN server has two MAJOR flaws in it.

1: No end of lag if there are more than 10 people playing.

2: A "No 'cussing' policy", which has to be the stupidest most juvenile rule to be thought up.

If they weren't practically the only server to play fanmaps, I wouldn't bother with it.

Seconded. I hate just about everywhere that has this rule - Renegade servers and otherwise. I mean, OH TEH NOSE I SEDID TEH BAD WURDZ!!1

I can, however, accept this if it's something geared toward young audiences (Renegade, being both a T rated game and on teh intarweb, is not) or if it's a compromise, such as "You can curse, but don't abuse your right to curse." A swear every other word isn't that great, either, but a "wtf." every now and then is needed.

Of course, that's not to say that swearing not being allowed is a bad thing. The solution is simple. Increase your vocabulary and use something other than the foul language. It's not that hard.

I think it's kinda sad when people like Johnny Cade are too unoriginal to come up with anything besides, "F*** YOU YOU F***IN F*** F***ER!". Sometimes cussing just makes a person's message completely unintelligible. A good book to read...

Swearing not being allowed IS a bad thing, because it treats "swear" words differently than all the other words in the English language, when really they aren't. There's nothing special about the letter arrangement in the word "Shit" that makes it any more threatening than "Hits" or "This" or "Sith". A word is a word is a word, and the only reason people react the way they do to swearing is because they're told to. Newborns and people who don't speak a word of English won't react that way, because there's nothing special or different about them at all.

Making a rule banning cussing makes no more sense to me than a rule that says Crimson wrote on Wed, 12 April 2006 18:48...that no nicknames with the letter "w" can play that day because there's absolutely no rationality behind it, other than "I don't like it" or "We have kids here who aren't supposed to be playing anyway". Fucking morons...

As far as the younger audience excuse goes, it's absolute negligence on behalf of the parents to allow a ten year old to play ANY kind of multiplayer game (Especially a shooter) and expect them not to pick up cussing. If you don't want your kids to have a foul mouth, don't let them play video games online, especially ones that are targeted for an audience much older than they are.

I'm angry now...

Not to mention the fact that it obviously doesn't *stop* swearing, because people still get banned for it. So they're still going to see cuss words. Though, unless they're like 5 years old they've probably already heard it all.

I'm angry now...

Unfortunately, the letter arrangement of words DOES make a difference. That's simply how the English language is. We have only so many letters that can be used, so different arrangements are bound to take on different meanings, and such words will be deemed socially acceptable or not.

Certain letter arrangements take on meanings that are not socially acceptable, and are deemed "foul". Simply because it is considered "foul" language, there are barriers in place to prevent the useage of them. Be it right or not, there are some "universal" swear words that are not deemed appropriate to use. The fact that they do not appear in the normal course of human speech also plays to that fact.

Stating that people react badly because they are told to is a moot point. That's the way things are with every form of human interaction. It would be akin to saying that the only reason sexual harassment is bad, is because we are led to believe it. After all, there is nothing special to simply another way of touching someone. Whether it's shaking hands, or grabbing something else, touching is touching, correct?

The problem with your comparison between swearing and the names with "w" is that one has nothing inately wrong about it, and one is deemed universally-socially unacceptable to use.

I'd be more careful using the word "universally" there. I agree that there are times when "bad" language is not suitable (e.g. if one was to appear in court, one probably wouldn't want to swear at the judge). I do not think, however, that leisure time spent on the internet need necessarily be one of those times.

Further, what if I were to become angry during a game of Renegade, and I take your advice insult someone without using "bad" words? While they may not immediately go "OMF U SED FUK MY MUM SEZ TAHTS BAD WURD," my message could--and would very likely--be offensive, as that was its intent. Perhaps a more logical standpoint to take on language in servers would be to look past the words themselves and consider what is being said (admittedly, I wouldn't be much happier if servers kicked for being mean, but it'd at least make more sense). People are offended enough as it is without going out of their way to have a fit when someone says "shit" when they die. It's not really hurting anyone.

Why do we even say it, though? I mean, what does it prove? That you're not happy about dying? I'm pretty sure nobody is, so why do we feel that we should make it publically known? I mean, I do it all the time, too. I always type "fuck" when I die, but getting past the fact that we do it... WHY do we do it? It wastes more time and energy, does it not? It's still not going to stop me from doing it, but it's just an interesting question to think about.

Sad part is I read the UN Forums, saw them apologizing to the wrong player they kicked because the 8yr was cussing...I called home, woke his mother up at 630 in the morning, PISSED cause he was using my WOL name, FoggyMutt when he did it (They were kicking FoggyC4 I

The swearing factor is very debatable but, the point is that Moderators ban from IRC with NO PROOF(and possibly because the player being banned is actually better than the moderator)

I was told from an 8 yr old kid living in my house it happened and when I confronted the UN member, he told me flat out, even though the kid was running RG, he hacked it and was cheating...keep in mind, this 8 year old is just learning to change his name in MSN...

Same kid different day...he yelled, 'hairy buttcrack'...TWO UN members where jumping all over trying to kick the kid...they kicked the wrong person with a similar name 2 or 3 times they were in such a freenzy to kick the fouth mouthed child...

Sad part is I read the UN Forums, saw them apologizing to the wrong player they kicked because the 8yr was cussing...I called home, woke his mother up at 630 in the morning, PISSED cause he was using my WOL name, FoggyMutt when he did it (They were kicking FoggyC4 I believe)...DEMANDED she storm in that room, uninstall the game IMMEDIATELY and punish him INSTANTLY for pulling that crap on his computer, my serial and my screen name...

Talk about feeling like a fucking retard when I get the IRC script of the cussing...

I remember a thread awhile back of someone being banned for cussing on un. The debate was over the word Fanny, which in the queens english is a sexual part of a woman.

So before you speak make sure you run all your words through a world translater to make sure it doesnt offend anyone. in this case it was fooker.

warranto wrote on Fri, 07 July 2006 07:35 Unfortunately, the letter arrangement of words DOES make a difference. That's simply how the English language is. We have only so many letters that can be used, so different arrangements are bound to take on different meanings, and such words will be deemed socially acceptable or not.

Certain letter arrangements take on meanings that are not socially acceptable, and are deemed "foul". Simply because it is considered "foul" language, there are barriers in place to prevent the useage of them. Be it right or not, there are some "universal" swear words that are not deemed appropriate to use. The fact that they do not appear in the normal course of human speech also plays to that fact.

Stating that people react badly because they are told to is a moot point. That's the way things are with every form of human interaction. It would be akin to saying that the only reason sexual harassment is bad, is because we are led to believe it. After all, there is nothing special to simply another way of touching someone. Whether it's shaking hands, or grabbing something else, touching is touching, correct?

The problem with your comparison between swearing and the names with "w" is that one has nothing inately wrong about it, and one is deemed universally-socially unacceptable to use.

Universally-socially unacceptable? Is the n00bstories server exempt from society? How about JellyServ? How about ANY other mostly-full renegade server? Outside of Renegade: Almost all Counter-Strike servers don't ban for cussing. Most condone it. Outside of mutliplayer-gaming: Every high school, bar, and on the street. I recently attended a wedding and some of the friendliest people there did a bit of cussing.

It's not "universally unacceptable", it's unacceptable in UN's ivory tower.

If they didn't appear in the normal course of human speech, the UN server wouldn't have a problem, and there wouldn't be a mountain of people who are banned for cussing from their sorry excuse of a server.

Again I ask. What makes the word "Fuck" so special that it's considered "foul" or "a bad word"? It is any worse than "Procreate", "sexual-intercourse", or "baby-making"?

Why do you think that the worse the language, the higher the rating on movies?

I think you are confusing social with private. Social is something that blankets the general ideals of the society. Private deals with individuals. Had I meant places such as n00bstories, the street corner or a naval ship (bad joke), I would have said privately unacceptable. However, because I said socially, I mean socially. Heck even n00bstories will ban for foul language, if it is excessive.

Interesting how you bring up friendly people with swearing, considering the two have nothing to do with one another.

Because bad language should be kept away from little kids, says society. However, Renegade is a game that's rated T. Games that are rated T should not be played by small children. Therefore children have no place on Renegade and the child arguement is null and void.

Thank you for bringing up ratings, though. T = 13+ year olds. PG13 = 13+ year olds. PG13 MOVIES HAVE PLENTY OF CUSSING, but for some odd reason, rated T games can't? Bullshit.

Tell me, warranto, what's the difference between n00bstories and UN, or a street corner and UN, or a navy ship and UN? Why is it okay to cuss in one and not the other? They're all open to the public.

you mean if you switched "UN" with n00bstories? maybe. but that'd have more to do with the fact of insulting the server. If it just said "fuck fuck fuck fuck." I'm quite sure

1. They wouldn't ban for it.
2. Even if, I'm sure a ban won't be the first measure.

The language rule was probably more leaning towards excessive and racist language more so than saying words like fuck and shit. Point is, n00bstories won't ban for venting frustration with words like "shit", while UN will.

Never once did I mention the "children argument". Good job creating an imaginary argument to prove your point though. I just mentioned that the ratings are based on what is socially acceptable.

T-rated games can have swearing, and often do. However, UN is not a T-rated game, it is a private server.

As for the differences, there are none. All deal with private individuals that make their own rules. There is no "do not swear" sign in the street corner, but there is no "feel free to swear" either. The individual group you are with must make that choice. In n00bstories, the group has decided that you will be kicked for excessive swearing. The UN, for any swearing; the Navy, only if it is done against a person; the Street Corner, only so long as someone walking by isn't offended.

Hence the first post in this thread...

Dunno who is really the "Decider"....does make ya wonder why the owner and clan leader undo each others work every month though...people praise Alk for the ban clearings and 2nd chances....never heard the same said for them being replaced ASAP...

Warranto will correct me if i'm wrong but i'm guessing even that would get you banned from n00bstories

No, actually it wouldn't it has a zero-tolerance for racism, but there's no harm in the occasional "fuck", even if it's a string of four in one sentence.

By the way, Fry@IRC failed. The ban was temporary. Consider this post a request for a permanant ban.

Thank you for bringing up ratings, though. T = 13+ year olds. PG13 = 13+ year olds. PG13 MOVIES HAVE PLENTY OF CUSSING, but for some odd reason, rated T games can't? Bullshit.

Never once did I mention the "children argument". Good job creating an imaginary argument to prove your point though. I just mentioned that the ratings are based on what is socially acceptable.

T-rated games can have swearing, and often do. However, UN is not a T-rated game, it is a private server.

As for the differences, there are none. All deal with private individuals that make their own rules. There is no "do not swear" sign in the street corner, but there is no "feel free to swear" either. The individual group you are with must make that choice. In n00bstories, the group has decided that you will be kicked for excessive swearing. The UN, for any swearing; the Navy, only if it is done against a person; the Street Corner, only so long as someone walking by isn't offended.

Perhaps if Enforcer showed you the rest of his log, instead of just what supports his flimsy points, you'd understand. You, warranto, did not make the child argument, although plenty of other people I've had this discussion with have made it, including some random mod the day I was banned from UN. That paragraph wasn't aimed at you. Sorry for the misunderstanding.

I submit that UN is NOT a private server, but a public one, since it has no password. If it were a passworded server and I barged in, it'd be a different story, and I'd have nothing to complain about.

And I don't think there needs to be a "feel free to swear" sign on a street corner. Most street corners don't have signs that say "feel free to breathe". Most public restrooms don't have signs that say "feel free to urinate", but people do it anyway. Does that mean they should be banned from the restroom?

It's a private server...a person owns it. If you don't like their retarded policies, then just stay away from them. I've got banned for Renguard bypassing twice now and I'm not going to bother rejoining.

If it wasn't aimed at me, then that's ok. I can see your point then.

Private does not mean passworded. Private means that it is run by the general public, and is free to do as it pleases.

The only problem with your latest comparison is that with the later two, you are describing functions that the place is designed to do (for argument's sake, lets assume every place is "designed" to allow you to breathe). A restroom is designed specifically for you to urinate, but no street corner is designed specifically for you to swear. If you want to design a building where people would be encouraged and free to swear as much as they want, whenever they want, go ahead. I'm sure that the government would cause you to put warning signs about it though.

I can see your point about the functions, warranto, but isn't the point of the UN server to play Renegade? Since Counter-Strike's popularity, cussing has become an intergral part of multiplayer games, especially shooters like Renegade. An arguement can be made that it's part of the UN's function to facilitate playing of Renegade, which includes cussing.

Which is why it angers me so much. It's like a restroom that kicks people out for trying to urinate. What the fuck...

I don't think it can be argued that any server owner is obliged to do anything for anyone (except perhaps for people who help support the server). That being said, I think it would be helpful for UN's reputation at least, and perhaps their server as well, if they weren't such asshats.

The server owner is alright...he clears the bans monthly and forgives the community...trying to keep the most players coming back...

Its the ones that disrespect Alk's wishes and reban everyone they want to, after he unbans them, based on personal feelings and wanting grovelling to occur to keep players from wanting to come back...

That's all I don't get...you'd think the founder and owner would have more control...

Just because one aspect of online gaming has allowed something like that doesn't mean that all online gaming should.

The point of the UN server IS to allow its visitors to play Renegade. However, swearing isn't a part of Renegade. It's just something that gamers have brought along and added to the game. Just like server mods. You're still playing Renegade with or without them.

As for the street corner and bathroom arguments... if we're talking public access, then that's ran by the government. There are rules for using public access bathrooms. You can't conduct illegal activity in it. You still have to abide by laws. Just like street corners, you abide by the governing laws. They're not privately owned. If they were, they have every right to control what you do and how you do it. If you were standing on somebody's property, they'd have every right to kick you off their property if you swore and they strictly forbid it.

No it's not, DarkKnight. They claim it's because they have 8 year olds on TS with them. What they're doing on the TS of a rated T (13+) game is a good question, though.
