Change the topic to "Happy Independence Day," it is the 4th to every other country, and to England it is the day the king said "Oh shit."

I made explosions. Many explosions. I didn't light the firecrackers, but since I almost blew my thumb off when I tried to do the same thing with M80s, I decided it'd be best if my dad lit them. Other than that, though, I set off alot of explosions. There's a piece of our driveway missing because of them. I also got a bunch of ant bites while picking up the remains.

Considering it was the 1700s when this occurred. the king more than likely did not say oh shit on July fourth. He probably did not even hear about it for a good deal of time, but who knows, he may even have said oh shit.

My dumb state won't let me have any fireworks, but it's been a great 4th of July anyway.

Happy Birthday, US-of-A!

My Happy 4th lasted a whole 10 minutes of lighting off Walmart Fireworks! Woo hoo! Since all the good stuff is banned in my state because of stupid fucks lighting off bottle rockets and stuff in their house, and having bottlerocket wars and so on. But we only did our fireworks because my grandmother wanted to see some.

I am still not quite sure as to why humans clap at explosions.

Anywho, the fireworks were good. We used one called "Hydrogen bomb." Quite nice. I wish I could have gotten my hands on some acetylene-oxygen mixture, though. That, or some berrylium-chloride (sp?). Though I hear it is very toxic, it burns my favorite color.

Happy 'clean-up-ground-zero' Day!

I still see no solid evidence of France being the deciding force in our victory over England. France helped us, but I think that we would have won regardless. Hell, France wouldn't even help until we won Saratoga.

It was pretty fun. Lit some illegals up the street with my girlfriend, and set off a couple small maltov cocktails in the streets.

Funny part is, I don't really like Independence Day. I'm more of a communist, but you really can't not enjoy maltov cocktails...
