Say I had a touch screen laptop and played RENGAGE on it, especially on those sniper servers, would that be cheating?

No, I'm sure there not, because i'm sure they suck-ass, otherwise gamers would use them more often.

i hate those laptops, im always afraid of breaking them when i get over excited nd start hammering it plus they are not very accurate

no i dont think it would be considered cheating, coz its just another way of playing, just like using a joystick or mouse

I can imagen that giving nice results, because you can barely turn around then, and it would need to be rather acurate.

i would say yes, because is you got it accuret. and used a stylus or something, you could pop someones head instantly. the skill to getting a headshot is in the mouse. plus you would get banned from the server for "regaurd bypass" or some shit like that.

What would be the chances of them catching you "CHEATING"? You can be running Rengaurd and still use the stylus.

Wouldn't there be a way to prove them wrong?

no, with a styleus you can tap on the screen where the player is. with the mouse you need a massive amount of speed and be very presice at the same time. you would find it easier to snipe with a stylus than a mouse.

there is no way of proving you are not cheating atm, untill rengaurd is fixed.

This is a dodgy area to get into since it could be deemed that you are making the game less accessible. Pointing devices of many kinds are used for many different reasons.

As mentioned above though, if this method were any good everyone would be doing it.

And, of course, you have to get the game/OS to recognize that the touch doesn't mean click here, but move the mouse here and then click. Touch screen technology works by (very basic description) interpreting mouse clicks, not mouse movements.

Renegade fires where the crosshair is, not at random points dictated by a click.

If you think money keeps people from buying things like that, if it made such an improvement, you're wrong... There's a reason why people like fatality don't use it.. not because they can't afford 500 bucks, it just isn't better...

It would be pretty good if you could use a touchscreen for sniping, the aim might be shoddy, but it would make a change from the normal. If you held down V (free aiming) you could probably make it work around the no-mouse-movement thing, and just move around with arrow keys and awsd.

But other than the novelty of it I expect it would not be much good.. and I would probably put a hole in an expensive piece of equipment trying to snipe people over-enthusiastically
