Hah, I must've seen this on about 6 forums now.

Very funny indeed! It makes you wonder what'll happen when someone comes and asks for his cashcard number.

P.S. in the version I read, http://duggmirror.com/gaming_news/Hilarious_read_Thirteen_years_old_tries_to_steal_a_Steam_account/ , the ending isn't quite " Go mow some yards, brown beaver. "

When Social Engineering backfires.

Remember kids, you have to be smarter than the other person to pull this type of thing off.

Actually, you just have to be more convincing, but usually being sly does something to do with your intelligence. Not always, though. A lot of people are too gullible for their own good.

on WoW a lot of people are desperate for money, so they try to scam people. the amount of people that try to scam me. WoW how a trade system where each person selected what they want to trade the press a trade button. then the other person presses trade. if anything changes you both need to press trade again.
so this is foolproof.

some people ask for the money first and not at the same time. it is so annoying how many people fall for this.
