Have you tried restarting the computer?

That seems to be the answer in most cases people report the problem.

Yes, a system restart quickly (depending on how long your BIOS takes to do its shit) fixes that 'error'.

... I have never seen a case where restarting fixes this problem.
What solves it is a clean install.. First uninstall Renegade, then delete the folders and registry info, and then re-install it again.

Or do it the easy way and do a normal uninstall + install in a different directory.

Funny. I've never seen a case were reinstalling fixes this problem. Restarting always resolved it.

Quoting Goztow..

Most people prefer to get rid of the old clutter.

You really shouldn't advice general ren players to fiddle around in the registry.

Yeah, you're right. They might get the silly idea to delete their Windows Sub Keys or something, lol.
