Years ago I was contacted by a phone call informing me that I just won a luxury cruise. I asked where they got my name from and what did I enter to have my name drawn. The guy I was talking to said sir I'm not privy to that information I'm just calling you to let you know of your prize.

I was like ok so where do I get my tickets. He said just send us $200 for your passport fees and we will be happy to send you the tickets and all the information needed. I said I have a passport already. I really didn't but was curious as to his response. He said well the money is to process everything through. Needless to say I got off the phone with him and said no thanks.

Well, if you have that much time, set up a sting operation with the bank. Ask them if they are willing to set up a dummy account for you to use, explaining that you think there is a scam going around, and you want to catch them. Send the scammers the information for the account you just set up, asking them to deposit the winnings in there, and mention that they can take out any fees they would need from that account.

They try, the bank traces who accesses the account next (or, even better, attempted transfer or withdrawal) and catches them.

Will the bank go for it? Probably not.
Is it legal? I have no idea.

Would it be fun, if you have the time? Of course!
