I found this amusing. Apparently the U.S. was holding a shitload of money from freezing Saddams assets and whatnot, so we gave it back to Iraq - in CASH. Yes, paper, cash, bills...FOUR BILLION DOLLARS IN CASH! The money was put onto pallets and flown to Iraq in a cargo plane. It was the largest cash shipment ever made by the federal reserve.

I just have to imagine somewhere in Iraq, there is a group of guys standing in a warehouse, and looming over them are 363 tons of bills, and they are like, "Holy fuck...4 billions dollars...what the hell do we do with all this?"

Well, most of that will end up in alot of private hands, some will go to the terrorists, alot of it will fall into US hands again and the rest will be spent building the shithole that is called Iraq.

Bush's days are soon coming to an end.
Ill bet even as president- hes starting to lose his confidence in himself, as well as congress.

The attention isnt on him anymore, im more interested in seeing what H.C does when she goes on her campaign...

OT: Good work today Darkknight, great team support on noobstories.

Hillary loses, end of story, else I'm going to start a revolt. I'll be a resistance fighter. Plus, the government's too big as it is, so it needs to be shrunk.

The government is too big, and unnecessarily big. And are "Diplomats" really supposed to be allowed to do whatever the fuck they want to with the cars? Honestly, they can do a drive by and police can't do fuck.

Diplomats are still supposed to observe the laws of the nation that they're in. But they get a special "diplomatic immunity" in case that they mess up, etc. Because basically it is to prevent another nation from imprisoning the diplomat in an effort to alter the diplomacy. If that makes sense.

unfortunately this is pretty much true, a few years a go a Russian diplomat was driving drunk in toronto, ontario i believe it was. he hit and killed a pedestrian and as far as i have heard there was nothing canada could do about it. they wanted to give him a trial here but russia said no. so he was deported and russian authorities said he would be punished...

prob he wants though.

Well what will probably happen is Iraq will use the money to buy an ICBM from Iran, launch it at us, miss us and hit the ocean. We will see them as a nuclear threat and nuke them back end of story.

Good. The government's job isn't to care for the poor.

Yes, I'm a heartless libertarian, but where is the individualism in America, anymore? Liberties? What are those?

The liberal idea of the "common good" looks an awful lot like Communism.

Funny thing is that communism isn't directly a bad thing, as long as you don't overdo it, like real communist countries.

In your eyes the Netherlands, Sweden, Norway, Finland and probably more or less the rest of Europe, would be communists.

Actually, that's just one small sample of what I'm talking about in the liberals' idea of the "common good."

The idea of not taking personal responsibility for your actions, and turning to the government when you fuck up, and the idea that private property is a bad thing. Not to mention how government (public) schools purposely prevent their students from learning too much, and how they're indoctrinated so blatantly with this leftist view on how the world works. The idea that equality of outcome somehow is better than personal liberty and equality of opportunity.

It's just an overall attack on individualism. Sorry, but Socialism and Communism just doesn't work. I want my freedoms. I want the ability to choose for myself be it for better or worse. I don't want to end up poor, but if my decisions lead me to that, I still don't want my freedom of choice to be taken away. I'd much rather know that I screwed up rather than know that the government controls my life more than it already does (and it does far too much already).

like that has to be? For socialism it certainly not, it just makes that the most ppl in a country agree on helping those that might just lost their job without it being their own fault, or help ppl with handicaps etc. It does not have much to do with liberty, the only thing I can think of it the amount of taxes you pay.

Mostly being poor isn't a choice so it shouldn't be treated like one.

Besides, Bush tends to give up a lot of personal freedom in the struggle against terrorists. Which is just what terrorists want, and the government, as the government will get more power and the terrorists has scared the hell out of ppl.

Leave it to private charity, then. Private charity always does it better. Look to the community for support, not your government. As sad as it is for someone to be out of a job and home, it is NOT the government's job to fix the "injustice". Bad things happen to good people, and it's the job of the community to rise up and help their neighbor.

If you leave it to the people, the people will rise to the occasion. Leaving it to the government only creates a black hole for our tax money, does little to help the problem, and gives the people a false sense of progress.

It's time for the people to take responsibility for themselves, their family, and their neighbors. It's about time that the people act like the adults that they are instead of needing to be babysat by the government baby-sitter that we end up paying for ourselves. I don't know about you, but I like being responsible for myself. It gives me a sense of accomplishment.

I don't see the problem of rolling around in it. It's not as if you're going to start shoveling bills into your mouth and up your ass. I imagine you'd want to take a real shower after rolling around in it, but if you don't shove it into any of your orifices, I don't see what harm could really come of it. Just watch out for paper cuts.
