If you had any idea what ideals inflicted on a person from a young age can mean then you wouldn't come across as a moron.

Take Christianity for example, if your tought Christian ideals from a young you'll likely go through life being Christian and not overly questioning it (ie: faith). Like some Christians don't think Dinosaurs existed even though there are fossils. It's the same thing with history books to them.

i dont understand one thing, are those girls in school? how do they get their education? or are they home schooled by their mom, like the waterboy movie?? cause i mean if they do go to a public school how is it that nobody ever told them "your mom is retarded and full of shit" or do they just ignore everything they hear that doesnt come out of their parents mouth. oh and as for their dad having a swastika as his companies logo, i wish i seen his his company vehicle driving around so i could smash something into his windows and his fucking face. and if those kids are in a public school then chances are the community accepts them as they are so then something is wrong with the community aswell.

I myself am a Christian, and was taught Christianity at a young age. However, I still have my own views of it, and I don't follow EVERYTHING I was taught, nor what the Church told me. So I may not agree with people turning athiest when they're taught Christianity, but it does show that they don't always follow what they're taught. If you BLINDLY follow, then you are either a fool, or have 0 commen sense. And what the heck? What about Dinosaurs? Don't self validate. If you are conditioned from a very young age with certain ideals. It is much, much more likely that you will perceive those ideals as morally right.

Way to go completely misinterpreting what I said. It was a comparison. And although you didn't quite manage to pick up on the language I used which specifically didn't imply all people raised as Christians continued to remain Christian. A lot of Christians DO NOT believe Dinosaurs existed and believe fossils are the work of the devil or are just falsified. Basically the girls believe that (assuming they are holocaust deniers) the history books are falsified and biased (like some Christians would view Dinosaurs). Note it was a comparison, not a generalization or a jab at Christianity.

He actually said it was damaging Germany's image. They aren't German and do not represent Germany. They do represent a set political ideals that were once enforced in Germany by the Nazi party. People will not associate that with the present day Germany but will associate it with Nazi Germany of the past.

cabal8186

3: When he said "I doubt that hitler killed just one single jew himself.", I don't think he meant "He's not a bad guy cuz he never killed a Jew...", lol

It wasn't intended as jab at him, and I didn't interpret as "he is not a bad guy". I was just trying to put across it was a rather pointless addition to the thread as Hitler did order the death of 6 million odd jews.

cabal8186

Also, I agree with Jerad... Those "sarcasm tags" were there for a reason...

It was very poor and unintelligent use of sarcasm. I was just explaining that's not how people with a racist mindset think. They have the ideal firmly placed within their thought process that certain races are inferior to their own.

IronBallsWhy did you think I did not read the article?

You said, "Beacuse they are American they aren't tarnishing Germany's image."

WHAT??? When someone thinks about Hitler and all the bad shit he has done, they think of Germany and Germans.

While it does not tarnish my positive view of Germans, what would the survivors of the death camps think? You think they don't know about these 2 girls? They hear and they remember.

The people that survived death camps were largely German citizens. It was in Germany that jews were first purged by the Nazi regime. They especially are less likely to see Prussian Blue (those girls) and think "FUKEN GERMANY ."

They'll associate it with 'Nazi Germany.' Not present day Germany.

You people are fucking stupid to not think that environment does A LOT to form a person's beliefs. If their mother conditioned them from when they were young, you tend to listen. You don't just automatically assume, "hey, mom's wrong".

If you just think it's as easy as "I don't have to listen to her" then you're a fucking moron. If you choose to ignore your parents, then you have issues. It's not the girls' fault that their mother has taught them something very twisted. I just wish you morons could even grasp that very simple concept.

The reason why you morons think it's so easy to see that racism and hate is wrong because you were gasp TAUGHT that by your parents. Maybe your parents didn't say to you "skin color doesn't matter", but your parents' attitudes towards those of different races, you saw, and you emulated.

These girls weren't taught that way. They were taught to hate those of a different race. Completely different upbringings, and completely different outcomes. It's incredibly easy to learn the difference between right and wrong. The girls know the difference between right and wrong... they just have a disturbing view of what's right and wrong thanks to their mother.

I mean... what tzarmind and I are saying isn't a very difficult concept to grasp. It's actually quite easy to understand.

I'd maybe agree- IF it wasn't something like hitler or nazism or whatever it is they beleive in.

First off, you learn about this stuff in history, and how it was wrong. So they either must not pick up a history book, or their mom decides to tell them everything and they don't question it.

To be honest, it's human's instinct to question what they are told. Usually it's better to than blindly follow what you are told. Maybe you don't realize, but the majority of teens DO question what they are told. Why? Well, if I'm not mistaken, it's around the time you become a teen that your brain develops it's "commen sense" part. Although it still isn't fully developed, it develops somewhat, hence why teens pretty much always have to be in an argument and whatnot.

Therefore, they either have a brain disorder, or decide not to listen to their commen sense and blindly follow their mother/father.

If the latter, then they truely are fools.

You just don't understand this concept, do you?

How can you question something when you have no reason to challenge what you're taught? If these girls went to public schools, then I can say I'd agree, but these girls have nothing to compare their ideas to. They're kept in a White Supremest environment. All they know and see is what they're taught.

The thing is, these girls are now just barely 15, and I doubt they've given much of a chance to experience different viewpoints. You can't expect a child to disagree with their parents when they're only surrounded by that viewpoint.

Think of it this way... if you're home schooled by very strict, Christian parents. All you have been taught is Christianity and Christian morals. You never hear of any questioning whether or not God exists. You're completely surrounded by Christian teachings. Do you think you're going to, on your own, suddenly ask yourself, "is there really a God?" Very unlikely that you would. Why? Because you're completely surrounded by God-filled teachings.

What Cabal is trying to say is that human beings come with a conscience...the inner guilt that wells up when someone does a wrong thing.

The thing is, will these girls question their mom when they finally see the opposite argument? How will they react when they see pictures of mass graves and gas chambers and piles of shoes of the victims? Will they stick on to their Hitler or even come close to accept the truth?

Common sense is not part of the human nature, its something you get taught by your mum and dad. If you don't get it, its called indoctrination and thats exactly what these girls have had. Their minds are so stuck in their beliefs that nothing will convince them otherwise.

OMFG... SOMEONE GETS IT. HALLELUJAH!

Thank you, thank you, thank you, etc... these forums actually have some hope left in them.

As for the whole "you have a conscience" argument... it has so many flaws, it's not even funny. Everybody has their own set values. One's moral code is learned, you're not automatically born with it.

As Ghostshaw said, it's indoctrination. You're pretty much brainwashed into thinking the way you do. Your conscience doesn't automatically know right from wrong. It's a learned behavior. Just like a dog doesn't know that it shouldn't do its business on the carpet immediately. It has to be trained. The same thing goes with your moral code.

Honestly, it's quite a simple concept. I fail to see your logic in disagreeing.

Indoctrination is the reason I'm not allowed to call fat people fat or white people white.

Since when is truth offensive?

PS: When I hear "Nazi", I think of Nevada or chemical warfare. Never Germany.
