I think I heard something about the AR team doing it after finishing up Apocalypse Rising, but I might be getting confused...

Somebody confirm that..?

Some members of the AR team are indeed thinking of going on to do a CnC3 mod later, but that does not mean it will actually happen, we have a lot of work to do on AR first.

How about the tip some people gave me:
Start off by extracting the C&C 3 building models etc. out of the main game and just import them in renegade and seehow it works out and get some ideas.

I was going to do a mod just ripping the models out of c&c3, and since I thought they were still .w3d, I thought it would be easy. If someone can find a way to rip models out of c&c3 and import them into max, tell me and ill get to work on a mod. Of course, the models could then be redone, but having the stuff ingame would let you do balancing and all that stuff even before you get the new models.

Ok let's try this:

Extract a model and rename the w3x file to w3d? Might work...Westwood has always been using w3d or something similar to it.

BTW I'm downloading C&C 3 demo now, so I'll try to help you a bit when I have installed it.

Currently, it is not possible to extract most of the files from the demo, since they are encrypted. Also, renaming W3X to W3D WON'T WORK as the w3x format is brand new and can be text-edited, unlike w3d, meaning that a W3D Importer/Viewer won't work - the file structure is different.

Also, Westwood has used the W3D Format only once - in Renegade. Emperor uses a different format and the other games are made by EA.

Guys, we are going off-topic in a silly argument!

Here is the thing:

Nameme99 wrote on Sun, 04 March 2007 17:18no, not RA, just Renegade and Gens/ZH
no other game uses .w3d

C&C3 uses .w3x for all the new shadders....

Renegade, Generals/Zero Hour, Battle For Middle Earth and Battle For Middle Earth II/Rise Of The Witch King use W3D. Renegade is the only W3D game developed by Westwood.

Generals was the brainchild of EA Pacific/Westwood Pacific which was a different studio.

w3x has new shaders + is half-XML according to one of the podcasts.

Currently we can't port C&C3 models to Renegade because:

- A) We can't decompress the models.
- B) We can't import the models into Max, due to A) and the format change.

Now, lets get back on topic!

EXdeath wrote on Sat, 03 March 2007 07:09This sounds like a bad idea. That's just me though.

EX, why? If done right, i think that a C&C3 mod would add a variety of game modes that can spawn interesting tactics and a fun and unique gameplay that renegade lacks.

So why not just use what god gave you... your eyes. From what i have seen on C&C3 all the models in there would be too high a quality for the renegade engine to handle anyways. So modeling everything from scratch would be hard.. But the end product would be something to be proud of. Am I wrong?

You'll need to wait for the official tools then jamiejrg: The models on C&C3 would go into Renegade. Renegade can hold more polygons that you think. Personally I don't beleive the models are that high a quality in C&C3. It's just the textures and shaders that make them look nice.

Actually, Renegade holds polygons very well, it's just that it absolutely dies when you put any sort of texture on them.

well, it depends on the texture, some textures on high poly models work well, I mean you can have a low poly model and a texture and rene will crash.
so, IMO, it depends on the texture...

Aleast 3, coming upto 4 unless its already passed that.

Renegade maybe old but it works fine, and we are gaining more stuff for it all the time, so just stay with it, it has free multiplayer, and a lot of people still play it. And it can look pretty good, look at Reborn for example. And we have bloom now (3.2 is taking a long time to come out, what are the chances that there will be another new feature for Renegade do you think 100 to 1).

Regardless what people say the C&C3 mod will be made on Renegade, the REAL Command and Conquer Renegade game.

Either way, imagine this takes a year or two to develop (like most successful mods), that means a full release wont happen until sometime 2008 or 2009.

I don't doubt Renegade's awesomeness (just look at my signature) however no matter what this engine can pull off, its abilities cannot be compared to those of new-generation engines. Especially in these new engines, where you can easily recreate C&C mode in a game with good netcoding, graphics, mod support, tools, etc.

So you expect tons of people to go out and buy UT3 just for new graphics when the current game runs fast even on old computers and and UT3 engine probably won't. Sorry to burst your bubble but Renegade has been around for 5 years and I actually think that I am seeing an increase in on line activity in the last three months, so I hardly doubt Renegade is just going to drop off the face of the Earth in the next two years. As long as there are people modding it it will continue to exist.

I never said Renegade was going to drop, nor did I say people would run for UT3 for its graphics. Common people who follow the UT series would be buying UT3, whose numbers are many times greater than this community.

If anything C&C Renegade's a great game and I can see many years left for it. It's my favourite game of all time, and I still play it constantly. However anyone experienced in different engines knows that Ren's version of W3D is very outdated and obsolete.

That may be true (I do like the UT series in general, except that the original UT doesn't work right on my new computers it will run extremely fast and then drop to normal speed than fast again). I simply think that Renegade is more fun to mod, and I hate it when people give it less credit than it deserves.

Agreed. What harm is it doing anyways, it may be redundant a bit but with all the improvements made by the community (IE- Scripts, shaders), in my personal opinion Renegade has been almost upgraded and feels a lot more like something that was released in 2003 or 2004 than in 2001/2.

It's amazing what people can do when they put their minds to it...

This mod is better suited for another engine, You'd have a better chance at getting the engine for CnC3 to be controlled in 1st/3rd person...then to have a large fanbase to play this mod in 2010 on the w3d engine.

The Renegade already had a "bloom" effect awhile ago, this new one is just increased, to a point where it blinds you.

Lets see you set up an Avatar 1st in the w3d engine... I wanna see it rip off a tanks weapon and attach it, that'd be cool to do.

Hell, why dont the 4 mod teams combine, and make a super TD/TS/TW/RA/RA2 mod, and have all the assets in one gigantic .dat file and you could have a nice rotation of mixing different era's from C&C.

Titan1x77 wrote on Wed, 07 March 2007 17:36This mod is better suited for another engine, You'd have a better chance at getting the engine for CnC3 to be controlled in 1st/3rd person...then to have a large fanbase to play this mod in 2010 on the w3d engine.

So you could have massive game of 32 - 64 players max (I mean that is nothing compared to Renegade's 125).

Titan1x77 wrote on Wed, 07 March 2007 17:36

The Renegade already had a "bloom" effect awhile ago, this new one is just increased, to a point where it blinds you.

It was only added in in scripts 3.0.

Titan1x77 wrote on Wed, 07 March 2007 17:36

Lets see you set up an Avatar 1st in the w3d engine... I wanna see it rip off a tanks weapon and attach it, that'd be cool to do.
Its called Scripting.

By the time such a mod comes out (2009, 2010?) I honestly doubt you'll be able to fill 125 players in 1 server. Even though there's plenty of people playing APB, you'd never be able to get a game of half that number. Let alone 125 players in one server, for a mod which probably won't be finished for at least year or two.

Coding on the W3D engine isn't unlimited, I don't think we'll ever be able to fully script the avatar... picking weapons off other vehicles.

No offense, but last time I checked I could make a Mod whenever I want to, for any game that I am capable of editing. If anyone is still around to play it, that is a different story.

Renegade always had a bloom, your an idiot... remove the scripts and look up into the sun (ingame, not outside your home)...you'll notice the screen gets a little brighter, 3.0 just incresed that on a larger scale.

125 players in a game like Renegade is dumb anyways... Renegade is meant to be small and fast pace, for a CnC 3 mod 64 would be plenty.. and im not saying that the CnC3 engine would be the best, just saying it would be better then the aging w3d engine.

Hay guess what, your the idiot! Because thats a dazzle effect, bloom makes the all bright objects glow (and flicker as you move), and does not just simply make the screen get brighter when you look at the object. It is at least 95 percent different, dazzle effects are also 100 % textures.

Use model changing script, weapon detection scripts, and the weapon change scripts. I could do it, but why would I spend my time on something I would not use.

Apparently you don't know much about Renegade, no wonder you want to switch to a different engine.

Not going to waste my time with ya after this, Im sure you need to rip off more models from other mods and continue to troll the forums and get into things you have no idea what your talking about.

The dazzle is the lens flare your reffering to...Don't try and put words in my mouth.

The bloom effect causes the screen to be full of light(it washes away the screen with light), Im telling you to remove the damn scripts and see for yourself...it doers exactly what that bloom effect does in 3.0 but less powerful.

We want to switch to get away from all of the bugs and horrible netcode, that you, nor anyone else is capable of fixing without the source code...by all means if you can get rid of the flickering snipers, blue hell, random game crashes, lagging vehicles with repair beams shooting out of them, wall lagging, and every other bug that hampers the game, Knock yourself out.

#1. The ranger was a temp and is no longer in, that was the only thing I have ever used form another Renegade mod, and ever will.

#2. That was completely off subject, so I think you are the one who probably has no clue what he is getting into.

1st this is bloom:

see how the turret glows, which it will not in any scripts version that is previous to 3.0. Also it does not seem to be filling my screen full of light.

2nd this is Renegade's definition of a lensflare:

see how it is composed of multiple textures (which move with the camera).

3rd this is the ini definition of the sun's dazzle:

See how it is a texture, maybe you didn't know this but bloom is not a texture.

If I am trolling what are you doing when you are trying to get a whole community to switch to another game by calling their current game out dated dated, and not fixable.

Anything with a shader like that takes in the lighting to make it have a specular look...yes your right we didnt have shaders before... many many other engines support this though!

I meant the sunlight bloom, which was always there and was increased with the bloom introduced in scripts 3.0... ok?

Allright , the point is, this engine wont have the players around by time you complete this project... Let me slow this down for you to

If
WAS
this

They would be better off on another engine, for more then a few reasons.

We all know what the w3d engine has been updated with, we understand what its capable of, but we also understand it's easier to do these things in another engine, and also get rid of all the problems the w3d engine still has...Did you know UE3 doesnt have VIS generation and what a pain in the ass that was... No more zones for Unreal engine 3

Also deco layers can be drawn withen a lower draw distance, can w3d engine draw a group of easily placed objects for only a certain distance?

Im not gonna get into what is possible in newer game engines, I'll let you figure it out the hard way and let you be stubborn.

Where do you see me trying to get this community to leave renegade and play it on a new engine?... I don't recall ever saying don't play renegade on that old engine, I infact still play on it all the time.

I have to agree with Titan1x77. There aren't going to be the players around unless the Source code is released and those bugs are fixed.

JeradGrey, look at the sun ingame on a cloudy map. When you see the sun glowing through it slightly, what you see is a mild form of bloom. If you don't believe me or Titan, ask Saberhawk since the new shaders are his doing.

I believe that if enough people continue to release/update their mods/maps the players will stay around.

Also, I realized what you meant when you were talking about the suns bloom (although I always thought that it was just the sun's texture showing through the clouds, beings the cloud layers are just add and subtract layers) and before I even finished typing my previous post I knew that the bloom and at least lensflares must be related (beings that once bloom was added for a while there was a glitch with the lens flares).

As for vis generation, I just quit using it. Took to long to implement on each level, and most of my levels are flat enough that it would not have done much anyway. But I am sure the UT3 will be a lot harder for the older computers to run, while Renegade will run on pretty much any engine in the present day.

And the only reason I try to support Renegade so much is because I am working on two mods for it currently.

Crow3333 wrote on Fri, 09 March 2007 06:04short question not related to the topic: Which script do I have to use to get this bloom effect? Scriptname?

Its not a script, once you have the scripts 3.14 installer, or 3.13 script just simply install it with bloom selected, otherwise you have to put postprocess.sdb into you Renegade data folder.

either way source code isn't essential to mod a game anyways... The bit I said about CnC3 was meant to show that even an RTS engine could become an FPS, thru some nifty coding and work.

and yea, source code always helps with introducing new types of code to use for shaders, etc..

When I first seen this topic, I thought someone was going to make a TD(Renegade) mod for CnC 3..lol

I think after we have a bunch of our models done for the R07 mod, We could work with another team to make an RTS from the Renegade characters/vehicles assets...basically a TD mod in the end...this would have to be another team as we are dedicated to working on R07 for awhile after its first release....but thats the opposite of the topic.

Fobby, wtf really.

DX8 to my knowledge never sported bloom, and the fancy lens flare effect we get when we stare at the sun isn't bloom.

Bloom is something new and was made available to the community by Saberhawk (who dissociates himself from BHS even though his work is bundled in scripts 3.0 and further, but I believe that's only the result of a partnership between BHS (Jonwil) and APB/Reborn).

Jerad also apologized concerning the stealing of game assets from our modification, so there's no need to treat him the way you are concerning this.

But you do have a point, rather than starting to work on a 5 year old game that doesn't have support comparable to say Starcraft, you're better off finding a better game to modify.

You can't just go on and call him a n00b for having a different opinion, if he feels that this engine is perfectly adequate and that the improvements made to it lately are satisfying, then so be it.

i see no disadvantage to using the renegade engine. in fact, using UT or some other engine just gives it that "boring, played" game feel. renegade's is totally diffrent. i tryed UT and it was totally crap, nothing on that i could see that renegade couldn't do.

About modding a different engine- It's not about the gameplay of that game, it's about what you can do in that engine. In the case of the Unreal Engines, there's a lot you can do. Check out UE3's Wikipedia and you'll see games that are nothing like UT (example: the new MOH game).

You can even make an RTS game with that engine if you really wanted to.

I tried to distinguish the lens flare from the bloom....he first brought up the lens flare, i never mentioned that until afterwards, remove the scripts and look into the sky, its a fake bloom sort of how it is with the scripts... I really only see increased brightness with 3.0+ scripts... they are more or less the same...the area around you brightens...but your right its not a true bloom, but does the same effect in the end.

I didn't want to go into great detail cause he was getting side tracked with dazzles, and textures and whatever else he brought up.

I dont even play with those new scripts anyways, for more reasons then just the bugs (disco ball effect), Scripts should of stayed server side...I'll leave it at that.

Jerad Gray wrote on Thu, 08 March 2007 20:20

Because thats a dazzle effect, bloom makes the all bright objects glow (and flicker as you move), and does not just simply make the screen get brighter when you look at the object. It is at least 95 percent different, dazzle effects are also 100 % textures.

Titan1x77 wrote on Thu, 08 March 2007 21:14

The dazzle is the lens flare your reffering to...Don't try and put words in my mouth.

No, you were the one that mentioned the lens flare, I was originally was talking about dazzle, you actually put words into my mouth.

The effect the sun makes is done by a dazzle effect which shows through the clouds. There are two layers of clouds with "multiply and Add" set as their shaders. The dazzle is added into the cloud textures and makes what you are calling the suns bloom.

But yes this is further brightened by the new scripts.

Titan1x77 wrote on Sun, 11 March 2007 22:54 I didn't want to go into great detail cause he was getting side tracked with dazzles, and textures and whatever else he brought up.

My last post was meant to end this discussion, because I am getting tired of seeing this tread at the top of the topics list. And yet you bring it all up again.

The disco ball effect was fixed in 3.4.

Well I learned something anyways, the sun is produced with the dazzle that uses "shaders" in the long run to "light up" the area, which i referred to as the "old/fake bloom"...

What I hope you learned is theres nothing special with the shader support in Renegade, as something as simple as a bloom effect was faked by a dazzle and shaders (that were already suported)...while many newer engines have per pixel lighting, native normal mapping support, and better netcode

I worked and played with this engine for years, Love the game, dont care for the engine anymore...it's old now.

Yah, I know that Renegade's shaders are nothing special, I'm just happy that it is getting closer to the newer games.

And I am also happy that jonwil is adding Antialiasing and Anisotropic settings (even though if you had the right graphics card you could have set these settings up anyway).

But who knows in the future they might add in some more really cool effects/options.

You obviously have not been around much, or else you would know that it is getting closer, unless you have problems with basic logic. Here, I will make you an example to help you understand.

EX:

Object1 = 1

Object2 = 45

Object1 gets five additional points because it gained something it originally didn't have.

Object1 = 6

Object2 = 45

Question: Did object1 get closer to Object2?

Answer: Yes (If this does not make sense to you then please don't reply).

Although your post was helpful and all, please don't post again unless you can make more constructive posts, or at least more specific (that way it will be a lot easier to prove you wrong).

Alright, first off, the bloom is anything but 'faked'. While it may not be implemented the same way some other engines do it (Source for example), the end result is the same. A 'bright pass' filter is run on the frame which gets anything that is above a certain brightness level. It then performs a horizontal, then vertical blur on said 'filtered' image, and then combines it with additive blending to the original scene image. IF we were making the Renegade game right now, the better solution would be to pack a luminosity texture along with all the other textures in the game and simply render to an alternative target and then perform the blurring and combining stages, leaving an image that is more clearly 'bloomed' with less GPU load. You also say that newer engines have per-pixel lighting. Take a look at this screenshot then, it clearly has per-pixel specular lighting. Oh, it doesn't have fancy distortion effects? Wrong again. There are other things that are being worked on that I can't even talk about yet!

(Apparently fixed in 3.2) Yeah, I have to lower my resolution settings from 1280x1024@60fps to 1024x768@40fps if I enable new shaders. I used them for a while, but then I decided I wanted the higher resolution more than a couple of blur effects. If this is fixed or at least made less painful in 3.2, then yay!

Really? Firstly, who are you to tell me not to reply? You obviously fail to relise that shaders may bring renegade a little up, but the game still does not stand a chance against todays games. Your "example" is extremely stupid, and proves next to nothing. Renegade is incomplete, and can't update in big strides, because no offical company is working on it. Yes, jonwils work, aswell as the work of others has helped keep the game alive for now, but it is getting to the point were they can't do much more.

Give me concrete proof that renegade stands a chance against games like halo, halo 2, call of duty 2&3, company of heroes, C&C 3, All those games, and a bunch more. Right now, you have not proven me wrong.

If graphics were everything this game would have died years ago. And you should have probably read the post after that one.

Third, Call of Duty 2&3 look like putty, Halo will soon have fewer graphics options, C&C3 looks like crap, Halo 2 requires Vista and I am not upgrading my system just for stupid Halo 2 (which is not all that great, I though Halo 1 was more fun).

Fourth, Jonwil and the rest of Renegade's mod teams are making even more possibilities with each script release.

And finally the example was stupid so you could understand it.

Ok. You do know that there is more to life then "knowing good games", right? I go out, I work, I earn money. I play a few games here and there in my spare time, and mind you, company of heroes (the game I usually play)is alot better then this in my opinion. Most of your posts, including your most recent one, AND the fact that you attempted to provoke a fight with me, simply because MY opinion does not fall inline with yours, prove you have no life outside this game.

Grow the FUCK up, and stop trying to attack people because they have an opinion. And yes, I will have fun in the Reserves killing shit. Alot more fun then you'll have writing your little scripties, and killing little virtual people.

Edit: Also, you do relized that I never said Renegade was a bad game, I simply said that, in my opinion, it does not have much of a chance to catch up to todays games. For a somewhat unfinished 2001 game, It was good, in it's time, and still is decent today due to the work of some community members, but again, isn't right up there with the 2006/2007 games.

COD2 kicks this games ass 50 times over. halo2 can ALSO be played on an Xbox, yes, theres more to life then just PC's dude.

Again, you provided NO evidence that this game can beat the more modern games. And that is coming form someone who can't even manage to meet an average of 1 message a day, and probably doesn't even play Renegade anymore, will thanks for some more supportive statements for Renegade on the Renegade Official Forums. Actucally Spetz5 is a very active supporter of Renegade. He is an Apocalypse Rising tester, so somehow I feel your accusations are in vain once more.

Actually, you attacked me for stating my opinion, which was "lol.. renegade is not getting closer to the newer games, and it never will. Theres RTS games that support graphics just as good as renegeades, it honestly doesn't stand a chance. "

YOU procede to respond with a post saying that I have problems with basic logic. this topic did NOT bump up because I posted in it, because if you noticed, MY first post was less than an hour after the one before it. I then responded to your example, simply because you attempted to insult me, by saying I have problems with basic logic. Oh, that and the fact that you thought you had the right to tell me not to post.

Edit: Now, Can this stop, or take it to a PM so these guys can get back on topic?
