Is there any way to enable these sounds used in CP1 without having to install CP1 again? I found a link to the sounds on cncsource that were made by CommandoSR but its a dead link.

Those sounds come with the game. You don't need to download anything.

Do you mean it's a client setting? Or that it's auto enabled by the server?

Actually I think the destruction alerts are set up in the maps, the maps are probably changed in CP1 and CP2 or at least the objects and convoy files are. What you will have to do is check the building controllers, if the controllers have an option for a string to be played when ever the health falls below a certain amount you just will have to give it the correct string. Otherwise it will require some scripting. But I am pretty sure you can do it by making temps.

afaik you might only need some form of jonwil's client scripts from 1.9.1 onward to hear some of the sounds (e.g. PA messages near buildings). I'm not sure if scripts have to be on the server to enable destruction imminent sounds, since the amount of health the building has to activate it might be set serverside, but the sound files themselves are within always.dat somewhere in the m00whatever.wav region.

Basicly all CP1/2 is is just the latest version of scripts released during that time and a few fan maps. So having the latest scripts you still have the right ones to call the correct thing (mainly snda).

I guess with a IRC script that checks for building health, when it's at a certain percentage it'll launch the snda command of the right building.

But i'm not the right person to design that script.

Shrine of Nod. I think the building might have originally been intended to control beacon purchases or something (GDI equivalent would have been the Advanced Communications Center). I believe the building itself might also be somewhere in always.dat, because it's in ACK's Country_Meadow map (unless those assets were some of the ones only he had access to).
