I've thought about buying from them as well, but I never did. It does seem kind of too good to be true. Although, they seem completely legit.

They look okay. I prefer to build my own PC's. I bought the parts for my current setup from <http://www.zipzoomfly.com>

A few years back(like 6 years) I bought a PC from there. Very good quality in my opinion.

The PC I'm on right now is one that I got from Cyberpower for my birthday. For what I paid for, it was quite a deal. However, I would suggest researching the components they'll give you if you don't change anything. I don't really like the MSI motherboard they give by default.

I'm with blazer. The only way that you know your getting a good deal, getting what you paid for,

and it being done right is to do it yourself.

To be honest the components look "OK", but there is something which noone has mentioned yet and thats the most important of all.

The Powersupply.

From what I can see Cyberpowerpc sells cheap cases with el cheapo powersupply. Which means the lifetime of your PC goes down by far because a good powersupply is important for the stability of your PC.

For example

)Sigma Gaming Orca Mid-Tower 400W Case has a unknown powersupply.

In other words

--> they sell PSU's but youle have to pay extra to buy a good powersupply I'd recommend doing that.

Also from what I see the cases they sell look very plastic (Eventhoug on pictures they look good)
Real brands: Chieftec, Antec, Lian LI.

My brother still currently uses the PC from Cyberpower my family bought all those years ago. It still runs quite well, but he has had to put a few upgrades into it since then. Upgrades like a Videocard, RAM and processor. Upgrades ran him about $300 total. Again, he only did this to upgrade and not because the components failed. I believe he still has his previous powersupply.

As the price may tell you, he didn't get top notch upgrades, just the essentials.

You can't unless you have a relay in the US, because CPC doesn't do international shipping (unless things have changed as of recently).

DO NOT BUY FROM THIS COMPANY

THEY WILL FUCK YOU OVER, I bought a laptop from them and when I received it I immediately noticed the shit quality of the screen. When I called them they gave me the phone run around between the same two guys. I called the California Better Business bureau on them and they are currently under pending investigation. I sold that laptop that I spent $1,200 on for $900 to a friend who didn't really care about the screen since he was going to replace it himself. The bottom line is buy a retail PC from some place with a known reputation like HP or even god forbid Dell.

HP is just as awful as Dell in my experiences. Well, maybe not JUST as awful, but still pretty bad. Everytime I send my damn laptop in to get the power supply fixed(won't get power even when it's plugged in unless you hold the damn cord in place), it ends up the same way after two weeks of its return again.

Generic is not the way for a gamer to go anyways. Get something you can fully customize for a fraction of the price. If you have the time, learn the ins and outs of buying your own parts and building your own PC. If your PC turns out like mine did then you won't be disappointed.

I have an HP DV9260NR

Specs:

Intel Core 2 Duo T7200

2048MB of DDR2 RAM

HD-DVD ROM drive

HDMI Out

TV Tuner

4 USBs

Gigabit Ethernet

nVidia go 7600GT 256mb dedicated up to 512 when sharing enabled.

Wireless G

17" inch Bright Screen.

Best laptop I have ever purchased. HP has the best fucking tech support I have ever delt with.
Don't even fucking compare them with Dell.

Then Get the step down from that one.

HP DV9339
T5500
2GB of RAM
200GB of HDD space
7600GT 256 Dedicated memory
Standard Lightscribe DVD/CD +/- RW Supermulti drive Dual Layer.
Still has HDMI Output

Well worth the money.

BUILD THE COMPUTER YOURSELF!!

- It is cheaper.
- You get EXACTLY what you want.
- You do not have to fool around with crap like Dell.

ZZF has been around for a long time. NewEgg usually has better prices overall, but ZZF often has sales that are unbeatable.
