I know how to make these things, but they are expensive, making one of these would cost 600-800 dollars at the end, making another would cost 200 dollars since the other 600 was for plaster and clay, the 200 is for plastic used in the molding, after you make one, you could make another easily by just buying plastic and molding them, good old stormtrooper armor days.

I would rather start building a life-size mock up of an Orca than spend a single penny on anything Halo related.

A life sized juggernaut in my backyard would rock, I would take out the neighbors new fancy lawn chairs, dog, and camping tent.

i would have choosen a mammoth tank, but those cant dance, if you let a juggernaught or tripod idle, they do dance.

Heh, if this guy's telling the truth about the suit being the one on G4, it's probably one of the suits made by Nightmare Armor Studios, who have since removed all references to it from their website. I managed to save some of their videos, though. You can find them here.

As for having your own Wolverine, take a look at this.

Edit: @Blazer: if you watch the videos, they took the suits to a convention, and they're also apparently paintball safe.

This is just like that time where people spam bid on an unlocked iPhone. It got to $99,999,999 (which is the bid limit of eBay) in about an hour or so from when i was told about it by PaRaDoX. Those were fun times refreshing to find it go up by 2.5 million XD
