How is saying "gunner is a mean black person" racist..? He's black, and he kills people, which I would consider very mean. :\ Its not like he's using the word black in a racist context.

No I haven't

Everyone has said the n word, not necessarily as a direct reference to a black person, but even as a joke. If you haven't, you're either very young, or a goody-two-shoes.

I did not say that.

Young kids generally tend not to swear. People who have higher morals than most people tend not to swear. (By people who have higher morals, I mean those who would not copy a friend's homework, who would never lie to their parents, who would always obey traffic laws, etc.) And even then, I've known some people who actually don't do any of those things listed who STILL swear.

Then again, some people just DON'T swear, however, personally, I find less and less of those people around every day.

But my main point I wanted to make back up a few posts ago was that saying the n word on the internet isn't really that big of a deal.

Nope. It's 100% legal to use the n word. Freedom of speech.

The only legal trouble you could get in for using the n word, or any offensive term for that matter would be if some physical engagement followed the use, and you were arrested for that. You could be charged on the account of the n word being deemed a "fighting word," which is actually a legal term used for a word that would instigate a physical follow-up to something verbal. Thereby, you would be charged and prosecuted for starting a fight.

In NO cases is freedom of speech stupid. I should be able to say what I want, how I want, when I want, and why I want to say it.

Do I believe that everything someone says is acceptable? Fuck no, but I fully support their ability to say it. If CNN wants to have a story about how George Bush is a "stupid nigg*r", then they should be able to. If FOX News wants to have a story on how Micheal Moore eats shit out peoples' septic tanks, they should be able to. Both news channels would receive some serious backlash from viewers for the horrible and pointless content, but it should be their choice to run said stories.

Not really. Like I said, it's 100% legal to say the n-word anywhere any time. However if you suggested someone said it on a kids' show, they'd most likely have to make an appology, be fired from the network, and have to pay a heavy fine.

You have the right the argue all you want, But to be honest.. you do it too much.

Not saying you should stop or anything, But what I said earlier, was NOT serious, So no argument was needed.

Next time, Will "[/joke]" help me avoid you starting an argument with me?

Yeah, I do it a lot, but (before for I knew it was a joke) you voiced your opinion, so I retorted.

Yes, that should work just fine.

blow up about it...
