Cut down to 75% size. We really should have started with some good old fashioned thumbnails but meh.

Quick question to both Oblivion, and Jeep Rubicon:

What programs are you guys using for your XP themes? I tried one, and it was real clunky, and took up a chunk of memory. Could you recommend one?

StyleXP.

It costs monies though.

Internet Explorer....oh lord.

My desktop was a joke by the way. I guess none of you are fans of the Paul Rubens.

Mine, due to having more desktop icons then I have space, I've decided to put them all in a folder that is placed on my desktop instead.

The ones that are left on my desktop are ones that am using daily.

The left screen is my laptop, it's synchronised using synergy.

The other 2 are my desktop, running dual monitors. The theme is Metalic Shades and the stats are from Samurize.

HORQPWER has an icon on his desktop which starts out with C&C3 - Train...

Close enough?

^about 2 weeks old, for another desktop thread.

What happened to keeping the resolution to a maximum of 1280x1024?

Not much has changed since the last thread:

I use tune up utilities 2007, as it includes a themes customization feature. It also costs $ but if anyone wants it I can "get" you a copy if you contact me over MSN.

Oblivion165 wrote on Tue, 23 October 2007 02:32Why is your MSN name Crimson, light? Because it's the nickname I use most of the time. I don't use it for Renegade because it caused too much confusion, but I keep it for a lot of other stuff, including MSN.

I use a modified file in my windows map (Dunno where) but some Patcher modified a file, so now my XP can run any themes, even fan made, It allows the same stuff as StyleXP, only no 'side-programs' like sidebars and stuff.

It's called UXTheme Patch, and I use it too.

Note: It's a violation of your EULA to use the patch, if you're worried about the kinda stuff, then don't install it.
