Abortion is murdering a child that otherwise could have had a good and loving foster home, and a fulfilling life.

How is it not murder? Even though the baby has not been born yet. It lives. It's blood circulates. Abortion basically stops all that. Which is murder. That baby could've cured aids.

Not in this world, just go watch Idiocracy (<http://www.imdb.com/title/tt0387808/>). That movie is dead on despite it's comical outlook on the situation.

Fetus = human. Consciously ending a human life (without consent) = murder. Thus, abortion = murder.

It's not that the baby treasures life at that time... but that it could've cured aids when it grew up! And that might be one in a trillion, and we'd have to wait until after aids destroys the human race before another baby like that is born... which is too late.

I know a girl who had an abortion, and if she hadn't had it, the kid would have grown up with a shitty childhood, likely with a learning disability, and would be total trash by age thirteen.

So if we should be able to kill kids BEFORE we know they're mistakes, should we be able to kill kids AFTER we realize they're mistakes?

No, but the state should intervene and make sure that the child goes to a home he/she needs in order to be raised properly, and with love.

The father should also be sterilized... just because I think he should, and I'm an asshole.

However, that would require massive changes to the 'Foster Care' system.

It might actually just be easier to give the kid a great living and kill the parents, because I doubt the parents contribute much anyway.

I think it would be good to abort if the kid was going to be born like super retarded or something. that's no life to live. But yeah it's a little touchy and I feel kind of bad thinking about a lil fetus being killed. Although you know I don't really see it as a person when it's only been a few weeks.

I'm with Canadacd, also, being mentally disabled is no barrier to a happy life.

Abortion is murder, as murder is the taking away of life (by force). Unless you're suggesting that a fetus is not alive...

I'm "pro-responsibility".

If you are willing to take the chance of causing pregnancy, you should accept responsibility for your actions and have the kid.

This is not a "act without worrying about the consequences" type of world, nor do I want it to become that.

Abortion is simply saying "I chose to act as I did, but don't want to worry about the consequences of my action. I will never learn, but I never have to worry. I can act however I want and get away with it!".

That being said, when it comes down to rape or the pregnancy comes down to a medical choice of saving the mother or saving the child, but not both... then abortion is fine.

Because they are extreme cases. With rape, the pregnancy did not occur by choice. As well, if that does not seem like a big deal, the mental anguish it can cause the mother is something I would not wish on anyone. Just think that if she has the kid, whenever she sees the kid, it would be a reminder of what happened to her. There would always be that underlying resentment toward the child for that. Even if she ends up giving the baby up for adoption, it is still 9 months of constant reminders of what someone did to her whenever she looks in the mirror.

Basically, it boils down to a mental health issue.

As for the medical reasons, it should be fairly obvious. Since it is impossible to save both, you must choose one or lose them both. Since the mother has a life ahead of her and the opportunity to become pregnant again, it is the logical choice to let her live. More often than not, if there is a problem with the pregnancy, there is a very limited stage (if any) in which the developing fetus/child could survive without the mother anyway.

I said above, I didn't think it was murder.. I think it is something else... but I can't think of the word.

Also, I am highly against foster homes. It is a place that you send kids, humans, you don't like so that some stranger has to raise them with a bunch of other kids. This stranger could be a good or bad person, and if they are a good person they keep the kid in the house and make him/her look good for people, like the item in the front window of a store. People come in there, judge the crap out of the kids and then take the one they like best, if any at all.

I think kids should either be raised by the mother, or aborted before any important life begins. It is only torture to put them through a foster home. Because also, I forgot to mention, any parent, if they don't like the kid, can return them to a home when ever they want...

If the mother wasn't raped, couldn't the baby be considered a reminder of the jerkoff who had his fun and left? Would that be easier to deal with than a rape? Is it, in a sense, rape? If the baby was given up for adoption, wouldn't this also give the mother distance without the additional guilt of having taken a life?

If the baby has a right to life, why would it have any less of one if it was conceived through rape? Is it still a wonderful thing that another human being was made despite the brutal way in which it was done? If someone must die, why not the rapist instead of the baby?

As for the medical reasons, I have no ready argument against it although I still don't agree with it.

Using your logic, I'm going to start killing homeless people. I'll just assume that every homeless person is living a tortured life, and then execute them. Because, hey, what is the point in liberty if Unfortunately, CHOOSING to be with a jerk is no one but the mothers fault, and once again, comes down to responsibility. In the matter of rape, there is NO choice involved.

Oh, I agree that the rapist should die, but why should the mother be forced to suffer through that part of her life every second of every day for the next nine months? I could not even begin to imagine what reliving a rape for nine months non-stop could possibly feel like. It's an extreme sort of example to show where abortion would be permissible. There is nothing to say that I think it should happen, but it is an example where it should be allowable.

I coached a kid(little brother's friend) that another coach decided to adopt, My mother was adopted and My Grandmother spent her entire life helping children through DA Blodgett adoption services.

My mother and my brother's friend's families growing up were, and still are excellent parents.

Fostercare is there and the amount of families that are good FAR outway the bad.
