The White House keeps on changing the reason on why they want to attack Iran. First they said Iran is trying to get nuclear weapons, even though Iran doesn't have the necessary infrastructure to support the development of a A-bomb. Now they're saying that Iran is supporting insurgents attacking its troops in Iraq, even though last year it was generally agreed on that the US is caught in a civil war in Iraq and Iran is responsible for only about 4% of the attacks on its troops.

<http://www.guardian.co.uk/comment/story/0,,2184077,00.html>

The really reason why it wants to invade Iran is because Israel is afraid of Iran replacing it as the superpower in the Middle East.

Except they are a big threat. And if they keep threatening to attack Israel we have to help Israel out because they're our allies. And why is the USA a dumb country? A lot of British people always talk bad about us, why? We like you and we think you guys are a great ally. Why not like us too?

No, they're aren't, except when the first missle is fired.

Even if they manage to beat Iran they could still cut off supplies lines to American troops in Iraq, and they would convince their allies and Shia miltias in Iraq to conduct major reprisal attacks on said troops stationed there.

Thus, if the US wants to attack Iran, they essentially stand to lose bigtime in Iraq.

I actually believe that it'll be the Saudis who will be the ones involved in any war with Iran.

Saudi Arabia for decades has essentially been the "pinnacle" of Islamic governance, and clout in the region. Most major deals that are brokered in the region are done through, or with the involvement of the Saudis. More importantly, current attitudes towards shunning Western ideas, and themes are fueled mainly by Saudi money, and schooling.

Iran is changing that. Iran is busy challenging Saudi Arabia's leadership in the region. Plus, remember that Saudi Arabia is a Wahhabist/Sunni regime, and that Iran is lead by Shi'ites; and neither denominations like each other much.

The Saudis would love nothing more than to destroy Iran, because Iran is threatening the status quo.

Edit: And to you Europeans who go about insulting Americans, perhaps Google the words, "Marshall Plan" . Maybe you should be attending history class, instead of posting idiocy on these forums.

Considering that even though the US spends the most money on education on Earth, more than any other nation, and the education system is worse than many European countries, it leads me to believe BartGg is right.

Well, you can thank the liberals for thinking that throwing money at the problem is going to solve all the problems.

As far as being the DUMBEST country in the world, that's unreasonable. We rank about #25 in the world, so we're a bit above average, just below most of the countries that actually matter. He can claim it was an exaggeration, but it's just annoying that Europeans are just as ignorant as Americans, only Europeans seem to have this added arrogance to their ignorance.

The above sort of quote is by far my favorite, I have seen it come up everywhere. I know it is off topic but I have seen a video on youtube made by some Australians about the world knowledge of the American public. All the comments where like above making it even more ironic. It was completely biased of course but I still found it amazingly funny.

I personally think Iran are blagging this to some degree and their bark is a lot worse than their bite. Israel are extremely tough and it almost seems that they have been taking on the entire Middle East on their own and not doing too badly. I'm pretty sure Iran left it its own devices would settle down. Poking it with a war stick isn't going to help much at all and I just see it as another potential to lose a lot of troops for an ideal

Well, the thing is we also need to know if there ever will be peace in Iraq and if the strategy will work out. While it is important to finish what has been started and make the sacrifices of many mean something, we also have to bear in mind the reality of the situation.

I am skeptical of the possibility of a stable Iraq.

@ Sn1per74 - Was talking about the hypothetical war in Iran. Iraq has been there for 80 years and they were living by their means for that all that time without big johnny america telling them what to do.

@ StarBuzz and Sn1per74 - Everyone said the same thing about Vietnam but pulling out early was the best thing we could have done.. Everyone was bitching that we were leaving before the job was done but in the end their government settled their own crap and in reality our "Police Action" just made thing a hell of a lot worse.

Excuse me? Your assumption of the military as backwoods uneducated bumpkins with no hope for a real job is 100% incorrect and insulting.

Those people are the best moral spectrum of our society, and understand the concept of sacrifice to make life better. The very concept that you being drafted is an upgrade is ludicrous.

The average front line soldier in WW2 had a third grade reading and writing level. Everyone else was put to use as an engineer/strategist/officer.

Regardless of education in the event of another WW the only test that will be conducted is an XRay. If your bones show, your in.

You're talking out of your ass. Remember that the entire population at that time was coming out of the depression era and the population as a whole was uneducated.

The military in a peacetime volunteer role is a BETTER educated force than the populace at general, and quite frequently use the military to get education to move into the private sector. Military leadership traits at all levels are highly desired and employers prefer veterans over video game playing slackers anyday.

It takes FAR more than an XRAY to get in. I recommend going through the filtering process and boot camp and see if you aren't whining by day one. These soldiers are tough, smart and valuable to society.

You need better info.

Just because low ASVAB slackers APPLY to the military, that doesn't mean they make it through training. And if they do, they CHANGE.

When they come home talk with them and see the difference in them. You'll understand.

During the depression, children were kept home to help with the farms and work in factories to put bread on the table. There was no PTA, Truancy board and certainly kids weren't CHOOSING to stay home. Life was hard and people died. Education was a luxury to the rich.

Do I seem like a bumpkin? Because when I joined I was EXACTLY what you describe. Now I'm an analyst for a fortune 500.

We will. But that's their job and they volunteered for that exposure to the possibility of death to help others.

That's very true but eventually they will run out of people from Alabama/Backwoods and they will start looking at us and a draft reinstatement.

Excuse me? Your assumption of the military as backwoods uneducated bumpkins with no hope for a real job is 100% incorrect and insulting.

Those people are the best moral spectrum of our society, and understand the concept of sacrifice to make life better. The very concept that you being drafted is an upgrade is ludicrous.

Without us bumpkin lowlives you retarded "elite" children wouldn't be leisurely typing away "sharing your wisdom". You'd be speaking russian/japanese/german and working a labor camp.

The average front line soldier in WW2 had a third grade reading and writing level. Everyone else was put to use as an engineer/strategist/officer.

Regardless of education in the event of another WW the only test that will be conducted is an XRay. If your bones show, your in.

It's not a matter of whom joins and what their background is...I'm just talking statistics.

You're talking out of your ass. Remember that the entire population at that time was coming out of the depression era and the population as a whole was uneducated.

The military in a peacetime volunteer role is a BETTER educated force than the populace at general, and quite frequently use the military to get education to move into the private sector. Military leadership traits at all levels are highly desired and employers prefer veterans over video game playing slackers anyway.

It takes FAR more than an XRAY to get in. I recommend going through the filtering process and boot camp and see if you aren't whining by day one. These soldiers are tough, smart and valuable to society.

A) Schools were not closed during the depression.

B) Every person in my Highschool that signed up with the military was either about to flunk out or didn't have the grades to get into college.

C) Was a social commentary on the WW2 medical exam.

You need better info.

Just because low ASVAB slackers APPLY to the military, that doesn't mean they make it through training. And if they do, they CHANGE.
When they come home talk with them and see the difference in them. You'll understand.

During the depression, children were kept home to help with the farms and work in factories to put bread on the table. There was no PTA, Truancy board and certainly kids weren't CHOOSING to stay home. Life was hard and people died. Education was a luxury to the rich.

Do I seem like a bumpkin? Because when I joined I was EXACTLY what you describe. Now I'm an analyst for a fortune 500.

I see. Since you are one of the exceptions to the usual then all people who join the army must be secret geniuses who wouldn't even need to join the military, just that they wanted to.

and bartG wow are you a retard.

That's a lie, Iran supported the coalition that toppled the Taliban in Afghanistan and told it's allies in the region to do so.

Quote:Well Bush will soon be out of office and hopefully the next person in charge will not allow this or recall it if the war was already in affect.

Not going to happen, the neo-conseratives have been pulling the strings since Ronald Reagan.

Quote:Well, the thing is we also need to know if there ever will be peace in Iraq and if the strategy will work out. While it is important to finish what has been started and make the sacrifices of many mean something, we also have to bear in mind the reality of the situation.

It's going to take at least a decade for the US to install a puppet government functionally enough to make it look like it can stand on it's own without US support.

The neo-cons could hardly care about their troops sacrifices, all they care about is building a war base in which to bully other European countries to enrich their fatass pockets, they don't care about Iraqis at all.

Quote:I look at a Soldier as being a better citizen than I. It doesn't matter if I have more education or not.

Except now there are gangs in the military.

Quote:The military in a peacetime volunteer role is a BETTER educated force than the populace at general, and quite frequently use the military to get education to move into the private sector. Not right now, the army's taking anyone they can get their hands on because they're stretched to the breaking point in Iraq.

prasp wrote on Wed, 24 October 2007 22:09The White House keeps on changing the reason on why the want to attack Iran. First they said Iran is trying to get nuclear weapons, even though Iran doesn't have the necessary infrastructure to support the development of a A-bomb. Now they're saying that Iran is supporting insurgents attacking it's troops in Iraq, even though last year it was generally agreed on that the US is caught in a civil war in Iraq and Iran is responsible for only about 4% of the attacks on its troops.

<http://www.guardian.co.uk/comment/story/0,,2184077,00.html>

The really reason why it wants to invade Iran is because Israel is afraid of Iran replacing it as the superpower in the Middle East.

Well, that is what they are saying. The real reason is because the US is trying its best to be the world's "International Peace Keepers."

Of course many people would like the US to pull out of the war like that snaps fingers, but that just wont happen. Do you realize how bad that would make the US look? To go in, mess around with the government, help in a war, and then just pull out without finishing things? It doesn't matter if there is any more positive gain for the US now, the point is we can't pull out until the job is done.

That is like borrowing money from someone, then while earning money to pay them back, you just quit and don't give them back what you borrowed... you just can't do that.

What's so imperialist about him? He's a good president. He made a few mistakes, but so does everyone. The economy is booming. The stock market reached an all time high. We're in a war for the right reasons. Saddam needed out. He was murdering his own people. Lemme ask you something. If you had a dictator ruling a country you lived in, and was killing your friends and family, would you want some other country to help you out? Or would you rather let him/her do whatever he/she wants and watch your friends and family die? But because George Bush entered the war, he is being criticized. For what? The war is a success if you look at the statistics. A few thousand people have died. Thats not many at all. 58169 Americans died in the Vietnam war. The Korean war 33000 roughly. Those numbers compared to a few thousand. It seems to me like i's a success. The dictator is out of power and dead. The country is trying its best to start a democracy, and we're waiting there until they do so. The fighting is slowly decreasing. Eventually, we will come out victorious. Until then, we need to support our president, our troops, and our country.

They're in Canada, helping to gas up your car, and my trucks.

As for Iraq, every time Halliburton patches up a pipeline, or tries building one, it gets blown apart.

Countries like Iraq and Iran are not apart of the greater plan. When the world unites into a single government they will not withhold the standards and ideals that are required, they are far too reliant on religion and it fogs their perception of reality.

You just proved yourself even more idiotic and stupid by not understanding the meaning of racism...

Racist

a belief or doctrine that inherent differences among the various human races determine cultural or individual achievement, usually involving the idea that one's own race is superior and has the right to rule others.

In english, it means if you consider a group you are part of superior to another group of people who are different. It doesn't matter if you are white, black, asian, or fucking boy or girl. It's still racism, and I'll be fucking pissed off if you are not tolerated here.

again, everyone please report his posts. All racists should be banned, and killed. Thanks.

The Republican party would gain NOTHING but more ground to have to cover if we went to war with Iran. There'd be no way the American public, as a whole, would agree with a war with Iran. My parents are Republicans, support the war with Iraq, but would absolutely protest war with Iran. I know they're just two Republicans, but it's a trend being seen throughout everybody, and to assume that Republicans would be praised for going to war with Iran is just absolutely absurd.

The only way the people will ever like him again is if he gets declared as some sort of hero taking out all the terrorists, now theyre jus gonna dive into Iran like they did Iraq and come up with some bullshit showing what a great job Bush did, exactly like they planned to do during second gulfwar but eventually managed to fail at it...

can't wait until someone actually posts an intelligent analysis of the Bush presidency.

Thorough well thought out analysis, not this speculative dribble and emotionally reactive rhetoric based on something someone's teacher told them one day.

So I dare someone to provide stats that can be checked and balanced analysis based on FACTS.

That won't happen, because we're all "geeks".

That should make it easier. Tech heads are usually more intelligent than most (albeit socially inept). Apply yourself.

I'm not saying I disagree nor am I saying do I agree, but isn't taking out Sadaam, who was killing his own people, resolving some chaos in Iraq?

And don't go shoving negative opinions down everyone's throat. (This isn't directed at the person I quoted). Don't go saying the War is doing more harm than it is helping.

It is actually providing jobs for US citizens. My Uncle applied for a job over in Iraq on his own free will back like 2-3 years ago... and he is still there today.

He has come home now and again a few times, but the last time he came back was like last year and a half, ever since then he has been refusing to come back. He is saying he is enjoying it there, besides all the scary things like Convoy runs and stuff. I believe he drives a humm-vee, not sure on that though.

The only way the people will ever like him again is if he gets declared as some sort of hero taking out all the terrorists, now they're just gonna dive into Iran like they did Iraq and come up with some bullshit showing what a great job Bush did, exactly like they planned to do during second Gulf War but eventually managed to fail at it...

THIS is my problem with European ignorance. I don't see Americans judging all of Europe's leaders. Instead, all I see is incorrect assumptions from Europeans, insulting our leaders.

Call me crazy, but slowly entering a war doesn't make sense. If we just eased our way into Iraq, it would give them a better chance to fight us. That wouldn't be smart, would it?

Since when is it a president's job to be at every "important" event that happens in America? Just because liberals like government interference, doesn't mean that conservatives do, too.

Are you KIDDING ME!? The stock market was the highest it's ever been in American HISTORY a few months ago. The reason it went down a little is because it was so high, and if you sell your stocks while it's high you get a lot of money. Then, it went down a LITTLE. The stock market is still very high. Our economy is one of the best it's ever been. Those that tell you otherwise are liberals trying to talk bad about Bush. So don't talk unless you know what you're talking about my friend.

You might not realise it, but America will hit a recession in little time, people have used the most amount of money they can possibly borrow from banks while using their houses as financing for it. Now the worth of houses is falling and people can barely afford to pay their monthly amount of money they need to pay to keep their house leading to the worth of houses even decreasing more and more dragging America and probably even Europe into recession. Bush should've done something about this instead of constantly purely focusing on the so-called war against terrorism (wich is not even the correct term for what Bush is actually doing) and pretty much investing all of America's funds in it.

And my point went right over your head. Should I be surprised? Probably not.

I wasn't talking about any elected leaders. I am talking about regular residents of European countries making it more of a point to discuss (and insult) American politics more than Americans care to discuss yours.

SSADMVRI wasnt talking about the fact it happened so suddenly, im saying it shouldnt have happened at all...
That's not what you said. Regardless, if your country was attacked, and most politicians even agreed upon another country posing a threat (you should see some quotes that top Democrats said before 2003 about Iraq and Saddam. You would think they wouldn't be so hypocritical now).

SSADMVRI myself dislike to much governemental interference in daily life, but when it comes to a disaster like Katrina and the presidents is nowhere to be seen, what the fuck does that tell you? It's not the president's job to survey the area like so many people think. Bush (or any other president past and future) can't personally change anything by visiting.

SSADMVRYou might not realise it, but America will hit a recession in little time, people have used the most amount of money they can possibly borrow from banks while using their houses as financing for it. Care to pay attention to what I actually said? I admitted that we will probably be hitting a recession, but that still doesn't change the fact that our economy is stronger than it has been in years.

Honestly, it's not the government's job to oversee the economy. There needs to be much more economic freedom than there is. I couldn't give a fuck less if the federal government destroyed the Federal Reserve. Actually, I'd support that.

The people were ORDERED to EVACUATE. There were many methods of getting out of the city. Those drowning were a result of their own stubbornness. Are you going to blame the government for the stupid actions of fucking idiots? Seriously?

What happened was on the state level. It remained on the state level, and if the federal government was turned down for help, it should accept it. I'm not for giving my overpowering federal government more power than it deserves.

Its like you and your friends are sitting outside, and some complete stranger comes up and gives a real onehundred dollar bill to you.

The stranger leaves and then you show your friend and they are like "I don't believe you."

Even though they witnessed it happened.

Those are the kind of people in this thread. XD

The US combat losses would haven been lower without any war. The fact Muhammed is blowing anyone up has nothin to do with Bush, are u really that ignorant to think terrorists will fear Bush because of his war on terrorism? These guys blow themself up to kill other people, theyre not afraid of whatever Bush does or could do. The economy might have improved in the last 4 years, ill give you that. However the world economy has grown in the past 4 years so you have to put it in perspective making the economy growth in the US rather small. And it is going to get bad from now on, do u not see the idiot low worth of the Dollar? Do u not see the problems that is going to bring along with it? Do u not notice the loan-crysis?

I wouldn't pin this problem on Bush right away...I don't see much of a difference between him and Clinton(who was popular because of the economy) when it comes to trade policy, which in my opinion is the reason our economy will begin to slow down. Our free trade agreements are butchering our industrial base which is the reason we became an economic powerhouse to begin with.

Yea.. but more Iraqi civilians would be tortured and killed with no real purpose.

Dying to protect someone else's sake is much better than dying for no real purpose.

So what your basically saying is that if you where head of a world power that could easily stop senseless killings in another country with low effort, you would rather keep all your people in your country and let other people just die?

And another thing, if we didn't retaliate against Afghanistan when 911 happened, our entire country could possibly of been an entire battlefield today for all we know.

The US retaliating shows that they aren't going to let themselves, as a country, be pushed around. If they just let it go, and allowed Afghanistan to live on, possibly many other countries and even other world powers would of moved in on the US and started a war in our own backyards.

..well maybe nothing THAT extreme, but if we didn't fight back, it would give the US an image that says "Attack us, and we won't fight back!"

George Clooney thinks there should be an intervention in Darfur.

Of course, as soon as it becomes a disaster, he'll go on Entertainment Tonight, and say that it was government mismanagement, and that he cares for starving children, and then drive off into the sunset in his shitty little hybrid car.

al-Qaeda would love it if the West headed into Sudan.

Yeah, but the 'Manifest Destiny' means you guys also have to eliminate us damn, dirty Canadians at some point.

Weird Al sangSo quick before they see it coming time for a preemptive strike.

Better America then China. You don't want the Chinese controlling anything. If allowed, China will be the next economic super power, they have reserves in every commodity for the next ten years and could push the market in any direction by however many points they wanted to really. America needs to be in control, the alternative is have a country in control that happily occupies another country for 50 years, dumps nuclear waste on them and eradicates there national language and treats them as second class citizens in there own country. That does not sound like a country I want in power.

USA all the way for me!
Go Bush, go America!

I never thought I'd see an English person saying that. Atleast there's one!

That's Canadacdn's usual and well-known tactic to loosen up stiff threads. LOL
