Since we are sharing small videos I thought I would post my favorite of all time.

I saw this years ago but it always stuck in my mind and thought it was freaky as ass. Can you even imagine?

I find it amazing that there are 400 miles of catacombs under Paris, thats a crap load of tunnels and most of them are unmapped!

It truly is the scariest place I can imagine getting lost in.

What a scary place; I won't go in there even if I am with advanced explorers.

I hope the man got out but I doubt it. I don't think he had any flashlight on him...just the built-in camcorder light. He probably got spooked or lost.

If he got out, then he would have come forward at least to tell his story no?

Spooky spooky spooky that's what.

Cool, but don't believe everything you see, the whole 'found-camera-explorer-thing' is probably made up.

I have a similar thought too now. I lol'ed at the "this is the gateway to hell" part. C'mon...be serious...you were supposed to look for the poor man.

I think it was a scheme to generate attention. Funny how they say it was like 400 miles of Catacombs and then they end up precisely in the area where the lost guy was in. Hmmmmm?

And why did the guy drop the camcorder? LOL...watching it again, I can't stop lol'ing at how he runs off into the dark passage after dropping his cam. I am sure he slammed into a wall shortly at 15 mph LMAO!

Check this out:

LOL it's says filmmaker as his occupation. haha!

Ah, technology. Making ghost stories that much more believable. Kudos to the guy for making such a good film.

Funny that they happened to find that exact place in the 700 miles of tunnels. I'm almost certain they were in the tunnels as it is a pretty scary place to be (well it would be with all of those bodies around...) and decided to actually film something down there to make their story a lot scarier.

EDIT

Just realized I was repeating what others have already said but I will repeat it for the fun of it.

I don't think it's coincidental that they found the same place. If you watched the tape when it begins, you'd see what entrance he started at.

Otherwise, the writings on the wall could determine where he was.

Man that guy must of shot himself, he should of used some string or a map or something!

Describe it to me, I am usually quite the google-smith.

@Comments of the guy possibly not existing and etc

Very likely that he didn't exist but they doesn't change that it is a gawd awful place to get lost in.
And also like Xylaquin said he could of seen the entrance he took as well as how he mentioned that the authorities keep shutting the entrances down and it may just be the most common one.
