I was just curious. Talking to my wife about something and I just want to know how many of you between the age group of 13-17 are actively playing sports at school, such as football, basketball, wrestling...etc.

Hehe, I still count, I'm not 17 until 17:28 tommorow. Heh

I played football at school. At college I don't do anything, but I have more time, so I could go swimming or something.

I don't fit this age group, but just to ask for a clarification; do you intend for this question to include standard gym class, or extracurricular sports? (Those done out of gym class)

I'm ##, so I miss your age range by # years. But when I was 17 all I did was make mods on the C&C series games, which I find to be way more fun then sports.

I'm 13, about 120 pounds and I regularly play Ultimate Frisbee () in my schools league, the rest of my exercise is going on walks with my parents and practicing frisbee with friends and such.

[Ultimate Frisbee is a surprisingly tough sport, my shoulder got wrecked today when I caught the disc and did a little barrel roll out of the field, tore it up pretty bad.)

Of course, I'm also an active gamer. Most of the guys at my school are.

When I was 13-17 (18 now), I never did any sports, other than a half a year of gym class Freshman year of HS, and I never regularly exercised. However, I still find myself to be in incredible shape...

I was just curious to see if the youth in those age groups are getting more and more lazier... Seems like a lot of youth are exchanging school and sports with video games and the PC. Scary to think about in the long run.
