Figured I'd post this thread from a car forum that I sometimes lurk in.

I love old 'graveyards' like this, and I'm sure you'll like this if you like cars, especially old American ones. The photos are pretty well taken too.

Thanks for the link, nikki. I love pictures of junkyards and also boneyards (airplanes). They seem very ghostly from another era.

If I was a hobo, I would live in the school bus haha...I am sure the doors work.

And what's the name of the white rusty car in this pic?

lol haha no, he said he was in 9th grade but is obviously still in middle school.

he paged me so many times about it, DP was a pretty crazy thing when i learned about it though too lol

Nice pics. Grabbed a few as stock images. The photos with all the cars in rows are excellent for repetitions.

The coffin is a little odd...

Fix up the body, replace all the windows, engine, and wiring, head lights and new seats with interiors and you'd have one bitchin' replica.

OMG! It starts here!

Seriously, I see no circumstance where that ended well.

These are just from the Cuban Walmart parking lot.

EDIT: I also am a fan of old heaps. Every time I drive by something like that I have the urge to jump out of the car and start throwing parts together. That being said, if your car is old enough to legally buy alcohol GET IT OFF THE DAMN ROAD.

As long as you maintained it well. I hate it when I'm cruising along and some jerk with a 1975 P.O.S. pulls out in front with his terrible exhaust system that fills my car with toxins in oh' about 3 seconds.

Trucks are the worst of all...

EDIT: I would assume the speed limit comments go without saying.

The fumes from badly-maintained vehicles are worse here, as they shove cigarettes into the exhaust pipes.
Lol kidding, that would suck if it happened though.

Yeah Turok was a major flop so my plans to join another community kinda pittled out. I will probably be hanging around more now.
