Well, you didn't mention which OS you have, and since it's asking for Service Pack 2, I'm assuming you have XP. Just do what it says; install SP2.

You must be seriously fucking retartedly blind if you thin that screenshot is from Windows XP...

But agreed, there's 6 versions of Vista, being more specific would have been better.

Might i suggest that you download the version of Visual Studio for Windows Vista, not XP.

Rocko, 2 weeks ban. Reason: unrespective behaviour overall and your complete own, unseen manner of spamming every topic you make or reply to.

These are only a few exemples, most of them moved to the silo, but there were man, many more of them as we both know and I really couldn't be bothered to write them down every time.

There are themepacks that make XP look exactly like Vista.

I knew you'd reply with something like this, but look carefully at the Start logo.

The top of it sticks out of the taskbar, this isn't possible with XP, even using alpha channels.

Take a look at the start button carefully. See the part of the logo that sicks up above the taskbar? This isn't possible with XP skins or themes, even using alpha channels.

Also, you're not going to ever get the quicklaunch icons so close to the start bar in XP.

If you set compatibility mode to WinXP then an error message related to WinXP isn't a surprise.

Use the Vista version of the software if you're using Vista.

Logo? Looks pretty much the same as this and this was taken feb '07 I hadn't got around to doing the icons but everything else looked like vista.

Oh em gee, it's also sticking out in this XP theme! Holy shit, it MUST be Vista!

Idiot.
