That sucks. He was probably one of the most awesome Comedians out there. But he's definetly not forgotten.

If he's right, he won't be finding out anything.

I didn't know who he was until I saw a picture of him on the news.

I was saying to myself "I know I heard his name before... but I don't know who he is..."

Then I was all "OHHH HIM!" when I saw him on the news.

If he is wrong he is having a rough day right now.

I don't think that any god would truly be concerned with the words once spoken by an angry comedian.

rip.

The ironic thing is, according to Christianity, Carlin would not suffer any worse of a fate in Hell than those who were kind, compassionate, and giving, but chose not to accept the Bible as truth.

Heh, considering the... umm... lively discussion about death and purgatory, I figure this song would be most appropriate.

Courtesy to the talents of GiR for this rendition.

I believe the same. My above post was made on an assumption that "Hell" may exist. I really don't know if some form of punishment exists in the afterlife but I believe we are products of intelligent design by god/gods unknown to us. They made us and forgot us...that's what I think. And they made us the ability to feel pain so that's how we eventually came to know good and evil; if it hurts you then it is bad. If it hurts anyone, then it is bad for them. If it does not hurt, then it is good. The "it" here can stand for anything.

I believe in living a good life free of lies, full of compassion to fellow man, and good deeds. Purpose of life is to live to the fullest, causing no harm to anyone, and in the end, die with a clear righteous conscience. Of course, death comes at anytime, so it helps to be "good" at all times.

It is reasonable to say he is half-right...but it is also reasonable to say he is fully wrong if you only had the time to look things through.

Ok, shutup about the religion.

RIP, I saw a tribute to him a few days ago, he's a great comedian, and makes some good points.
