I've linked you to the newscoverage of Sarah Palin's acceptance speech of becoming VP. It is 26 min long. This woman is the perfect person for vp. First, it takes away woman voters from the democrats. Second, she is the feminist that can work with pretty much all feminists except the radical leftists. She works, is pro life, and unlike Obama, actually has experiance leading people. She is the perfect VP candidate for reaching across he aisle for Democrats and Republicans.

lol this means McCain can't use his "inexperience" rhetoric against Obama. I think McCain cares more about winning this election than for the future of the country lol.

A VP is suppose to be fit for role of President if something happes to the PResident. MAN, I would rather have Hillary be PResident than this unknown Palin lady....just imagine her being President.

I think this VP pick has a chance to backfire.

I can't wait for the VP debates where Biden will own Palin roflmao

Muad, she is also pro-life...so women who are unsure about abortion or who believe that they should have a choice in their babies won't really like her.

note; I am not for Obama or McCain...I am more liberatarian but just my 2cents I think. Obama seems to think everyone will cooperate to his plan lol he will have many enemies if he wins and he would find it very hard to accoplish things hes promising now.

Sorry, I should rephrase what I said. Pro-life restricts more rights than pro-choice. Pro-life restricts the woman's rights because the child's rights would be restricted either way.

I did a debate in my government class about abortion, my side was pro-choice. I had an argument that I was trying to remember with what I stated above.. but I just don't remember what I was going to say. It had something to do with age restrictions on various things... but I just can't remember it. :\

I don't see how it's any different from the interaction between adults. We can't go killing anybody

we want because they make our lives inconvenient, especially if we're to blame for their presence. This principle is just extended to unborn children because they're human that should be given the right to life.

Okay then, lets get rid of all our laws as they are all based in moral and religious values. Who knows, we might become like the innercity in 30 years.

Biden will not "own" her in VP debates. The guy has been wrong for 30 years. I don't count that as experiance. He's a liar, and an idiot. Palin has some number of years, I can't remeber how many, as mayor of a town and then 2 years as governor of Alaska. That is not inexperience. What Obama has is inexpericance. He's a street agitator with 143 days in congress. That's nowhere near then amount of experiance that Sarah Palin has in office and leading people. He's never done that, and neither has Biden. So in a more ways than one, she has more experiance in what is needed to run the country than both Biden and Obama.

I think she's an awesome choice. She will definitely appeal to the moms who were gung-ho about Hilary. Men too, will go for her, because she's pretty hot, she doesn't wear pant-suits, and because she is a traditional mother who doesn't have a vagina filled with teeth.

Frankly, I was hoping for someone like Mitt Romney, or Bobby Jindal, but she makes the race much more interesting. McCain does get rid of the 'experience, or lack' argument by doing this, but judging by Obama's success, it seems 'experience' may not be a very high priority for voters.

She's also earned a reputation for going after a lot of 'pork-barreling' projects, and people within her own party. I think she'll have what it takes to face off with Joe Biden, a man who I also have great respect for.

Honestly, I'd have to say that this election shows the world what America is like when it's at its best, and Americans should be proud.

I think darkies like you aren't human beings, but that doesn't mean my opinion is right... If you can see how stupid and arrogant that sounds, then you might want to step back and look inside yourself for a while.

I'm far from Christian conservative, but my fiancee and I didn't have an abortion. We came up to the point of doing it, waited right before she had to go in for the procedure and walked away. We knew it wasn't right. You might choose to kill that child if you were in my position. I didn't, and I don't feel anyone should have the choice to kill like that. The fact that we could have walked into a clinic and ended my daughter's life in a few moments is very real in my mind. That she walks around and is happy and healthy because we didn't go through with the procedure makes it look like attempted murder.

Believe what you want, but "a little blob of cells" is scientifically proven to be human. A Human being is defined by an entity that is composed of its own cells and DNA structure that dictate a human. And since the DNA structure of an unborn baby is different than that of the mother's, it is a human being.

We were all a "blob of cells" at one point. In some ways, I don't feel that you progressed much from that point, either.

If I view the cells as human, then I can't be a libertarian and NOT be pro-life.

okay if you dont like black people thats not my problem.

Anyways, besides the scientific definition, I don't believe the Supreme Court or law has ever set in stone when an embryo is legally a human being. Also it's not like I want everyone to have an abortion lol. Just that the government should not be involved in the matter and allow people to decide for themselves.

And since you're christian why does it matter? if the fetus/baby is killed right away won't it go straight to heaven anyways? lol

I'd just like to throw in here that I'm pretty lucky to be here. While my mom was pregnant with me the doctor performed a test which came back stating I would likely be born with a rare debilitating disease and wouldn't live very long. He suggested she get an abortion and left it up to her. Turns out it was completely erroneous. I was born just fine. However I came very close to due to that mistake. Mind you this isn't totally relavent as if abortion was made completely illegal, there may still be allowances for medical reasons. This may have fallen into that catagory. Still something to think about, and something unsettling... Think of how many babies were never born due to that test giving incorrect results. They stopped administering it a few years after I was born for that very reason. I dunno I think it's kind of unsettling.

I only think abortions should be allowed in cases in which the the pregnancy was imposed and not expected. I don't mean not expected as "I forgot to take birth control" (If that's the reason, then they shouldn't allow it) I mean in a situation like rape or something similar.

Also in the case of putting the woman's life at risk.

Laughing... have any of you guys even HAD sex? I have the feeling that your convictions would fold in a case where birth control failed or a condom broke (the latter has happened to me at least 2ce, luckily nothing happened). In other words - a genuine accident, after all measures to avoid pregnancy were taken. I've had several partners, and more than one pregnancy scare. Did I consider abortion? Sure, for a minute, and then I realized that I can't take the easy way out of a situation that I put myself in. That and the idea of ending a life for being an inconvenience was absurd.

Don't be stupid. My opinion wouldn't change. It is my opinion for everything, not just abortion. People always choose the easy way out, and when laws grant the easy way out, it screws up society because people become lazy, then the lazy way of doing something becomes the standard way of doing something. So what then? People try to laze out of the lazy way and it just keeps going down like that.

There needs to be a law for anything that grants the easy way out of something and says "No, if you can't deal with the consequences, then that is your problem."

It has absolutely nothing to do with me personally. If, in the event that I am involved in a pregnancy scare, would I her to consider abortion? Yes I would. But that shouldn't be an option if the pregnancy doesn't fall under on of those categories.

And I still consider this to be pro-choice.

I really don't understand how the abortion debate still manages to heat up American politics so much. The United States has a whole slew of larger problems to deal with. Get back to that debate once your deficit is being payed off, and China has fewer of your T-Bills.

Plus, if you're sleeping around, and yet are pro-life, something is messed up, because I thought God supposedly looked down on abortion, and premarital sex.

How is abortion not that big of an issue? If I view abortion as murder (as I do), then it is probably the largest impediment of an individual's rights as you can get. That seems to be a worthy cause to fight for.

Who says that pro-life means you have to be Christian/religious?

I'm one of those people who believes in not dredging up the past. I figured that since it has been years since Roe v Wade, Americans would have either gotten past it, or put it on the back-burner, because frankly, I think the States has some bigger problems that need to be dealt with.

Up here, we've had our abortion debate, and that chapter is over. There are some people who aren't happy with the outcome, but our current government, which is much more conservative than yours, has said that it's not worth opening up the debate. Same thing with same-sex marriage, we had our vote, and although the government doesn't care for it much, they still believe that the debate is over.

From what I see, the only country that is so hung up (or at least the most vitriolic) about abortion is the United States. Maybe it's because the concept of 'God' is part and parcel of America, or because your politicians seem to not want to face the real issues... I really don't know.

Anyone I have met who opposes abortion, at least to the point of getting angry about it, is religious, and is usually a Catholic or Protestant. I have met people who are not religious that don't particularly like it, because it's a grizzly subject, but they do understand the need for it, and just want to focus on other issues. I myself am in that crowd.

It is a heated debate in the US because the country itself is based on freedom. However there are two freedoms that are granted: The right of say and choice and the right to live.

If you are for abortion, you are for the right of choice but against allowing an unborn baby the right to live. However if you are against abortion you are for giving the baby the right to live, but against the right of choice.

It is a paradox that can't be settled very easily. That's why it so heated in the US.

In fact, when I was doing research for the debate I mentioned in an earlier post, I found that there was this one dude (Who was pro-life) who took an assault rifle and opened fire on an abortion clinic killing a desk attendant, and wounding a doctor a secretary and a few patients. Ironic?

It just goes to show that it is taken very seriously.

Yeah, well, if we just settle on what was decided in the past then we couldn't fix the mistakes we have made.

Our government has decided on allowing for wire tapping without warrants. It's been years since this has become common place. Is my right to privacy not worth the fight for?

Anybody who can just say "it's in the past" when it comes to laws is too afraid of questioning what they believe. Any politician not willing to vocalize their views, all of them, is not strong enough in their views.

Also, it's not a paradox. It's a matter of whether or not the unborn child is human or a human-to-be. Anybody turning to the argument "it's the woman's body" is looking for a cheap way out to deciding on their values. If the unborn child IS human, then it deserves all of the basic human rights, and unless the child poses a threat to the mother, its rights trumps the mother's misguided assumption that she shouldn't have to be inconvenienced. If it's NOT human, then the fetus doesn't have any rights and abortion should be left alone, unquestioned.

Then you cannot possibly give the woman domain over another human, especially because of an act that she committed. Unless by rape and/or she is physical (or mental) danger, abortion should not be a legal option. Yes, it's her body, but one's rights do not trump another's.

Yes you should. An unborn child develops full brainwaves early in the pregnancy.

It is a lifeform that houses its own form of Human DNA and preforms all 7 life functions. If that isn't "alive human being" then would you care to explain what your definition of life is?

Extreme views in either direction concerning abortion ignore one of two facts of biology:

1. An early-term embryo has no functional nervous system (though the first activity can be measured fairly early), thus no brain, no consciousness, no feeling.
2. A late-term fetus does have a near-fully-developed nervous system; thus it is capable of feeling and limited thought (possibly consciousness, though we really don't know where that begins), even motor control.

We can safely assume that the line between a human being and a potential human being- if a definite line exists- falls somewhere between those two stages of development. There is a huge, obnoxious gray area there, and both sides of the abortion 'debate' (since it is never a formal debate so much as a passionate argument) tend to expand their position from one end clear across the gray area into the opposite end of the pregnancy. This is absolutely stupid.

Everything we know about biology tells us that an embryo which is only a month old is not a human being yet- that it is not capable of thought, feeling, or anything beyond the basic metabolic processes which sustain even the most elementary bacteria. Likewise, everything we know about an 8-month-old fetus tells us that it is clearly a human being; it is even able to survive and finish developing outside the womb if necessary (with some assistance from modern medicine- I should know; I was born a month early). Hell, a 6 or 7-month-old fetus is well-developed enough to be recognizable as human, to the point where its brain- as it truly is a brain by that time- is able to effect control over muscles.

Arguments to the effect of "we don't know where the line is, so we must err on the side of caution" are utter bullshit- we do know where the line is, we just don't know where it is exactly, and we know damn well that it doesn't lie at conception. Arguments to the effect of "until you are born, you have no rights" are utter bullshit also; we know, and have known since the ECG (that's Electrocardiogram) and the ultrasound became mainstream medicine, that a late-term fetus is as human as a newborn baby.

Arguments from the "it's your responsibility, slacker" perspective are even worse, relying on ad-hominem to make their point. Yes, it's your responsibility... but the argument goes both ways, doesn't it? It is your responsibility not to bring a baby into the world when you know you can't care for it, just as it is your responsibility to make sure that baby is cared for if and when it is born. It is an inherently neutral argument given weight only by the actual or implicit inclusion of "you kill babies because they're inconvenient."

Based on the known facts- not on bullshit, not on the "Word of God," and not on those heart-wrenching pictures of dead embryos- my stated opinion on the subject is that abortion only becomes objectionable late in a pregnancy when the fetus is known to be a thinking, feeling creature. What would I do if I got someone pregnant? I honestly have no idea; I've never been there. I like to think that I'd consult her, then make a decision based on our situation at the time- but who knows, maybe I'd get all sentimental over that little clump of cells and try to hold onto it no matter what. What I do know is that sentimentality makes horrible policy; the difference between "right" and "wrong" on this subject is almost always defined by entirely subjective views- not by biology.

Not to drag this even further off-topic or anything- just trying to inject a little common sense (appalling how uncommon it is) into the thread. By all means, flame away.

Be careful- there are several different "vegetative states," and some of them allow no possibility of recovery. They're misdiagnosed fairly often, though- which is one good argument against pulling the plug. On the other hand, once it is known for sure that a patient will never recover, keeping an empty body on life support is rather pointless and wasteful of medical resources.

Here's a hypothetical question for you: if a patient were to recover from a PVS after all higher brain functions had ceased for months, perhaps years- would it be the same person who awoke in that body?

People need to learn the RIGHT thing to do isn't always the WANTED thing to be done.

If someone is in a vegetative state, and they have said they wanted the plug to be pulled, regardless if they will recover or not, you have to do it.

I don't think it is anyone else's business to get involved in it. No one other than the family or the person(s) involved should have a say in the matter. It is just not your place to say "It is not right to pull the plug on this person" when you don't even know who they are or why they are there.

Trust me, I'm all for euthanasia. If someone wants to end their life, then by all means, listen to them. I used to be on the Republican side of the Terry Shiavo case, but now I think it was cruel to keep her alive.

You know, even if it's NOT the same person, that doesn't mean someone is incapable of having a happy life. This one lady had a terrible case of amnesia. She had a seizure (I think) and woke up one morning not having any memories. She used to hold a good career job, but lost all of that. Essentially, she had a completely clean slate, though she could drive and talk. For the past 10 years, she's had to start all over. She can now recall memories from the time that she had to start all over again, but nothing before.

She says she's happy. She says she can't miss memories that she doesn't remember ever having. So I say that if the person is capable of starting over, it'd be cruel to not let them.

I am still undecided on the abortion issue at this point.

However, I think the same people who think a fetus is a human and has feelings should also be against cutting off part of a male baby's penis. I am profoundly against circumcision and mostly against abortion. Like others, I wouldn't want an abortion ban to exclude certain circumstances where it is preferable. But, what if people just say it was rape since it often can't be proven?

Well, they could just take the DNA and track the father.

And one more thing, even though I said I only accept abortion in those circumstances, I also don't want the current law to change. I realize that it is wrong, but would rather focus attention elsewhere because the current system works and I don't think it needs to actually change. Like I said, the right thing isn't always the wanted thing. :\

And I actually support circumcisions. I am male, and I find it as a very important thing to do. I always thought it was kind of disgusting not to do it.. :\

It was important back before people were able to bathe every day... nobody wanted fungus growing under their foreskin, so the age-old response was to cut it off- or so one explanation of the practice goes.

Not terribly practical in this day and age, but typically when you have it done you're too young to remember it hurting later anyhow- I certainly don't. Still, it is a questionable practice- causing some harm, however small, and doing no good. The fact that anybody finds an uncircumcised prick disgusting is grounded in learned cultural perception- and if we're circumcising our kids because we think it looks nicer, we're doing it for entirely the wrong reason anyway.

Personally, I find the human body much more beautiful au natural- no unnecessary surgery, no tattoos, no piercings- but recognize that others don't see it the same way.

Nukelt15 wrote on Mon, 01 September 2008 11:58: Extreme views in either direction concerning abortion ignore one of two facts of biology:

1. An early-term embryo has no functional nervous system (though the first activity can be measured fairly early), thus no brain, no consciousness, no feeling.
2. A late-term fetus does have a near-fully-developed nervous system; thus it is capable of feeling and limited thought (possibly consciousness, though we really don't know where that begins), even motor control.

We can safely assume that the line between a human being and a potential human being- if a definite line exists- falls somewhere between those two stages of development. There is a huge, obnoxious gray area there, and both sides of the abortion 'debate' (since it is never a formal debate so much as a passionate argument) tend to expand their position from one end clear across the gray area into the opposite end of the pregnancy. This is absolutely stupid.

You've mentioned the huge grey area...shouldn't we draw the line at the beginning of it as long as we're unsure? Unless the woman's life is threatened (I'd include carrying the child of your rapist because there's a good chance of the woman contemplating suicide), there's no valid reason to allow abortions. I'm an agnostic, not an abortion clinic bomber...the left likes to make this a religious issue, when it's in fact a common sense issue (and liberals have always had problems understanding those).

Government's only real job is to protect the lives of the citizens...ironic how Obama with his lifetime fascination for Marxism and big government fails in that regard.

Palin seems like a decent VP. As long as she's not the president I could care less about her right-wing social views.

Concerning circumcision...I decided to get circumcised at 18 solely for aesthetic reasons and I don't regret my choice in the slightest...denying your child the right to choose against an irreversible aesthetic surgery seems like bad parenting to me.

That's a load of bullshit indeed. The show claims that with foreskin, you have more ejaculatory control...I experienced the exact opposite myself. Perhaps it's because I learned to cope with the sensitive foreskin, so once it was gone ejaculatory control seemed like a piece of cake...might not make that much of a difference if you've never been used to having foreskin.

Ok, after watching that video I now feel informed enough to back up my new argument.

It doesn't matter. Both sides are wrong. That is my argument. You are wrong if you are against it and you are wrong if you are for it. There are simply not enough positives and negatives on either side to pull it in either direction. Plus, either if you circumcised or uncircumcised, you can still perform as you would always.

This is why this argument is pointless and anyone who supports a strong feeling about it either way should just stop. There are more important things in the world to worry about than some stranger kid losing a small bit of skin or not.

So yea, just to recap, I'm not for it but nor am I against it.

Being against it has a very strong argument.

We're talking about mutilating a part of a male child's body. Yes, we have to entrust parents to make decisions for their kids, but that's a permanent act done that has no real benefits besides aesthetics (which, according to stats -- that actually make sense -- women prefer a cut penis. Whether or not that's rational is another thing).

Are parents wrong for doing it? I don't know. I don't think it matters all that much, but when it comes to changing the anatomy of someone, even a child, I think it's best left up to the person to decide for themselves as long as there is no significant medical reasons for doing it.

Are parents wrong for doing it? No they aren't. However are they right for doing it? Still, no they aren't.

It isn't like they are cutting it off completely. It can still be used therefore the only thing that stands left over is if they prefer to have it on or off. That's it.

"Mutilating" is an interesting choice of word. Although it correctly describes the procedure, I think it is a bit too strong of a word for this. It is like saying you mutilate your hair when you get it cut or mutilate your fingernails. Sure both your fingernails and hair don't have nerve endings in them and can't feel pain, but it doesn't impact your life once they are removed. Which is what I'm trying to point out.

If you tend to prefer one over the other, that is perfectly fine. However if you are against one and not the other, that is different and I think such opinions should be avoided. It's like being against a certain hairstyle or clothing line or skin color. It doesn't have an impact on your functionality in life so it should not be an issue.

And as far as these "organizations" that are for or against it... they are a waste of money and I think they should be disbanded.

I'm not so sure on how it prevents STD's, You can still get crabs, a womans juice can still slide down your pee-hole and infect you, or cold sores (I forgot the medical name for that infection) on yer dong, all with or without the skin.

I mean, with a cut dick I'd think it would make it easier to infect you, since your foreskin can be a protective layer.

I changed the subject. Sue me. I fully support an adult's right to decide if he wants a circumcision. I don't think a parent has the right to decide something like that for their child.

Saying that women prefer it isn't necessarily true, either. You have to ask women who have been "with" both. I believe a survey done found that over 70 or 80 percent of women who have been with an uncut penis prefer to be with an uncut penis.

That's besides the point.

Does cutting your fingernails or hair effect the reproduction rate of humans on earth? No, and neither does circumcision. That is why I like to think of circumcision as nothing more than a simple style that stays with you for the rest of your life.

As for what Crimson said, I do agree that it should be left up to the person and not the parents, however there is also the fact of choice: would someone rather have it when they are old enough to choose for themselves or young enough to not remember the pain?

In case you haven't noticed, your fingernails and hair grow back...
That's besides the point.

Does cutting your fingernails or hair effect the reproduction rate of humans on earth? No, and neither does circumcision. That is why I like to think of circumcision as nothing more than a simple style that stays with you for the rest of your life.

As for what Crimson said, I do agree that it should be left up to the person and not the parents, however there is also the fact of choice: would someone rather have it when they are old enough to choose for themselves or young enough to not remember the pain?

Cutting off a woman's clitoris doesn't change the reproduction rate of humans, either...I really don't understand your line of thought.

Sparing a child the pain later is not as important as giving said child the chance to make their own decision. Irreversible procedures should not be undertaken lightly, nor should they be carried out without the consent of the person on whom the procedure is being done- or unless their life is in danger and a decision must be made. I've never heard of someone dying because their foreskin wasn't removed, and it is a procedure that can bloody well wait until the kid's old enough to make their own decision- it should be at least that long before they take their penis out of their pants anyway.

I knew someone who had to have it done for medical reasons, so the procedure's not without meaning always. I do agree the choice should wait though.

This is interesting.

People here believe that circumcision should be done later in life, and should be based on their own choice.

That's exactly what abortion should be about too. The woman is in control of her body, and it should be her decision, not someone else's... especially not her government's.

The people who say "it's her body" completely miss the point of the argument.

It's whether or not it's a human life and if its rights are equal to the mother.

The only reason why I would ever support the rights of someone being taken away is if it protects the rights of an innocent being.

The embryo doesn't fall into that category, tho...it's not her body, but a life form with it's own genome of human DNA growing inside her body.

What does that have to do with anything? It is in the exact same boat as circumcision...

Just because you don't like it and I don't like it and many other people don't like it doesn't take away from the fact that it is still a valid optional choice to do it.

Also, about the they should have the right to chose argument. I already said I agree with that, but that isn't the case. If you automatically give the right to chose to the person and wait until they are older, then that means that the entire procedure should just be discontinued as it really has no meaning.

Even though I would prefer people to chose for themselves, I think it is simply the better option to let the parents chose because the child won't ever remember the procedure or the pain, and they will grow up with what they have thinking it is normal. I don't know about you but I didn't go around as a kid checking other little boy's penis' to see if mine was "normal."

Which is why the argument shouldn't be "Is circumcision good or bad?" but it "Should circumcision be left up to the parents or abolished completely?"

Neither of which I feel is mine or anyone else's business but the family of the child and the child themselves.

Err... I don't even know why I keep replying here.. it goes against what I'm saying.... This issue should not be important to you or anyone at all. I'm done replying cause it makes me look like a hypocrite.

Let me get this straight: You support parents decising to have their daughter's clitoris removed, which can lead to her never experiencing an orgasm and severe psychological damage...but I guess it's all fair game since she's still able to reproduce, right? Have you actually hit puberty, yet? Jeez...

Your "letting the individual choose about having irreversible surgeries done to his body = abolishment of circumcision" argument seems pretty absurd...I already told you that I decided to get cut as an adult, so you do the math.

I know I said I wasn't going to post again, but this isn't defending my argument like I said I wanted to avoid doing, it is defending and reinforcing the words I used in my last post.

That is not what I said. I never said "It is alright to do and I support them doing this." In fact I said specifically that I did not approve of it.

R315r4z0r said:Just because you don't like it and I don't like it and ...

Then I said that I agreed that I think the choice should be left up to the individual and not the parents:

R315r4z0r said:about the they should have the right to chose argument. I already said I agree with that

And then I went on saying not that I agree with this practice, but that it is none of our business what parents do to their kids within law.

For shame, Crimson! How dare you actually educate people on something that's perfectly natural!

On a more serious note, I totally believe in choice. However, abortion is something that I've always kind of been "bleh" on. It's a hard thing to decide. On one hand, it's the woman's body, and she has to go through a lot of pain, possibly risk dying, etc. Therefore, on that perspective, it should be up to the woman to get the abortion. At the same time however, a fetus could very well be considered human life, and killing it is just as bad as murder. You're not giving the soon to be human a choice if they wish to live or die, and the same goes for simply running up and shooting a person.

But, for the most part, we can all agree that no two major parties can agree on the abortion issue. Therefore, in the event that such a thing arises, I'd say the person in question should be able to choose for themselves. If they want to not have an abortion, they can. Those with the personal convictions against it still don't have to do it. At the same time, those who truly have good reasons for it should be given the option to.

Perhaps, to possibly prevent stupid people who simply don't want the baby from getting an abortion for all the wrong reasons, have it be a fairly quick trial on whether she should be allowed to have an abortion or not. If they have legitimate reasons, they could be allowed to, and etc.

As for the whole circumcision thing... Yeah, I really think it's best to let the kid decide for themselves, except for perhaps medical reasons. There's no reason outside life threatening diseases or the like to chop off a part of a kids dick.

You asked how men would be able to find the g-spot later in life without the clit. The clit isn't a map. You don't need the clit to hit the g-spot.

Yes, that post definitely makes you look like less of a dweeb.

Pretty believable explanation for your unfunny 'joke': "some men dub the clit as a g-spot"...yes, they're usually pale, live in their parents' basements, overuse internet jargon, point out the difference between anime characters in cartoons and videogames and have never gotten anywhere remotely near a clit or g-spot since birth.

Yeah no, shut the fuck up and bring your stupid shit elsewhere, JohnDoe.

Now, to be honest, I find it pretty lulzy that Obama picked Biden and McCain picked Palin. Obama's whole campaign was pretty much based around him being "inexperienced to the corruption that is politics", so to speak... Then he chooses Biden, who's no stranger to the game of politics.

McCain picking Palin, well... He pretty much ran on the whole "I'm really experienced and know how shit goes, I'll make sure stuff gets done". Palin doesn't quite have a reputation or anything, but eh, atleast no one can say "OMFG HES NOT CHANGING ANYTHING WTF".

The last time I edited it was pretty long ago, like probably several months ago, so you must have had a lapse in your observation, because that's been there for quite a while. No, you don't make me feel insecure, because until the day that I for some reason meet you in person, you're just another faceless dick on the internet, who means nothing to me.

Moving on.. ACK is right and you totally did reel me in, so I guess you deserve a response.

I remember posting about how dull my life was, that was during the summer. I had to move to a different state, 600 miles away from all my friends and those I'd be going out and doing stuff with, so yeah, my summer was pretty dull. I did get out a bit and meet a few people, but what can I say? I don't think I've ever stated all I do is sit around at home playing with my PC, but if you can find me somewhere I've said that, I'll most definitely take that back.

Also, I'm 14. I'm not old enough to be a loser adult living in my parents basement yet, since I'm still being raised and stuff by my parents.

Anyways, my question is why the fuck would you bring peoples personal lives into this topic? Have you run out of talking points or stupid things to make fun of people for, or something?

I don't know who's the more effective troll between JohnDoe and troop. They both are incredibly effective. JohnDoe hits people at their core by insulting who they are and using facts against them, twisting them into a weapon. Troop just misconstrued the truth and pissed off everybody by acting like an idiot.

They're both very effective techniques. As for what's more effective to get under my skin, it'd have to be troop's tactic.

Since you don't seem to understand words alone, a pretty picture should suffice.

Do you know how a forum works?

Anyways, I can sum up basically everything I'm trying to say in a sentence. You're wrong about basically everything- shut the fuck up.

But, since I've got stuff to do, I'll pretend you never dodged my points and move on, I guess, because proving you wrong apparently does nothing.

Also edit @Cheese: He's not really making that much use of facts at all if you look closer- he's just misconstruing statements and turning it into troop styled "u has no lief lol" bullshit.

When I made those remarks about your dull life and profile, I actually thought I was talking to that Carrier weirdo. Since you're all pretty much crying the same tune, it's understandably hard to keep you, Carrier and the Streetfighter geeks apart...now here's the funny part: My assumptions turned out to be correct nonetheless...not only do you dweebs give the same gay teary-eyed replies, you all share the same sad life story.

Now I feel really bad.

Do you want to know why nobody believes you? I'll tell you anyway:

1) You already admitted to turning to the Renegade forum seeking comfort when nobody in your new town was really interested in you. While I can see why they would reject you for being an insecure dweeb, I find it particularly funny that this happened in summer and must've made you look like even more of a geek to them when you turned up at school completely pale.

2) You're so insecure about your life that you felt it was necessary to take a screenshot of my reply and edit it for people to hopefully believe you. Now THAT says a lot about your confidence....BWAHAHAHAHAHA!!!

3) The only 2 people supporting you are the Streetfighter geeks. Ryu, the self-admitted nerd who started this with his hilarious ignorance of female anatomy, and Cabal, who has proven himself incapable of giving a reply without phrasing it in geekspeak or using internet meme forum pictures...you can tell how much time he spends speaking to people in person. Yes, you definitely want those two in your corner...if you have to fight off an orc invasion and need someone with extensive knowledge of secret spells and summoning the undead.

Yay, another troop- Because you can CLEARLY tell EVERY aspect of his life, right? Really...

Honestly though, moving to a new area during the summer can suck most of the time unless you're older. Try moving away from somewhere you were for awhile, to some place entirely new, have no drivers license, can't get into bars, etc. It's not that easy. But of course, if you knew anything about anything, you'd know this.

Quote:2) You're so insecure about your life that you felt it was necessary to take a screenshot of my reply and edit it for people to hopefully believe you. Now THAT says a lot about your confidence....BWHAHAAAAAAAAHA!!!

I'd say he'd be more insecure if he started making false accusations with no proof to back it up, and simply tried to cause doubt and confusion. Generally, when you try to prove someone wrong, you uh, use proof.

I'd rather be a self admitted nerd than a massive incapable moron in the closet with a tiny dick.

Also, I'm quite capable- I just generally don't exercise the ability much, because I rarely find it necessary. But I'm bored right now, so... Yeah. By the way, I would tell you that I do talk to people in person when I have the chance (I'll admit I'm not ALWAYS outside, else I wouldn't be on a gaming forum now would I), but you'd ignore it entirely. But I guess in saying that, I sorta did say it. Whatever.

I really wonder if you yourself have any actual friends, assuming you're like this alot. I mean, shit, you're assuming I'm how I am on here in real life, this must mean, by your logic, you're incapable of even making a decent argument, and incapable of sane logic. And that you have a tiny penis.

That aside, I'd like to get back on topic now. What are everyone's opinions on her so far?

Interesting, so you had trouble finding people that wanted to spend time with you as well...I like how you never mentioned sports as a way of hooking up with new people, especially at that age. I understand you were too busy in your basement learning new Streetfighter combos...

I find it funny how when I post a well written response to what you say, you ignore the majority of what I say and retort with the expected.

I'd be less surprised, but

Yeah.

Now, what's the point of this, you ask? Simple! It's in the Heated Discussions and Debates subforum. Which means, I get to prove you wrong. That's sort of the whole point of arguing and debating. I mean, unless you're posting here for a fight. In which case, wait, what? I guess that means you're wasting your time, too.

But, I'll still be nice and continue to respond.

Wait, who, me? I haven't played Street Fighter in ages. If you're referring to my avatar, it's from another game, JoJo's Bizarre Adventure. If you're going to go all "lulzinsult" mode, you might aswell, I dunno... Say things that make sense?

Wow lol, when did I ever say I turned here for comfort?

This topic is just too completely retarded to read.. I see people making long topics but all I can read is the hurf durf dweeb geek nurd loloul from JohnDoe.

I come here because I like the people here, and I like Renegade. Never have I said I come here for comfort or some other emo reason like that. My personal life and my life on the Renegade forums are completely unrelated. I don't see how me editing the picture relates to my self confidence (which is actually pretty high,) but I guess something like that would be expected from somebody like you. How's the downs treating you?

Anyways, you can go on living in your fantasy world where you're kind of the forums and automatically cooler than everyone else. I'll continue living in reality, where, once again, you're just some random internet prick that I don't see the point in arguing with anymore.

You're just so fucking stupid I can't stop laughing. LOL GEEK NERD ROFL FAG

Ignore any stupid commentary from this blog, but I randomly came across these two entries regarding Palin's interview with Couric, which turned out to be MISERABLE. Watch the clips, yourself.

<http://www.dailykos.com/storyonly/2008/9/25/141534/323/1003/610224>

Quote: COURIC: You've cited Alaska's proximity to Russia as part of your foreign policy experience. What did you mean by that?

PALIN: That Alaska has a very narrow maritime border between a foreign country, Russia, and on our other side, the land-- boundary that we have with-- Canada. It-- it's funny that a comment like that was-- kind of made to-- cari-- I don't know, you know? Reporters--

COURIC: Mock?

PALIN: Yeah, mocked, I guess that's the word, yeah.

COURIC: Explain to me why that enhances your foreign policy credentials.

PALIN: Well, it certainly does because our-- our next door neighbors are foreign countries. They're in the state that I am the executive of. And there in Russia--

COURIC: Have you ever been involved with any negotiations, for example, with the Russians?

PALIN: We have trade missions back and forth. We-- we do-- it's very important when you consider even national security issues with Russia as Putin rears his head and comes into the air space of the United States of America, where-- where do they go? It's Alaska. It's just right over the border. It is-- from Alaska that we send those out to make sure that an eye is being kept on this very powerful nation, Russia, because they are right there. They are right next to-- to our state.

Quote: COURIC: Why isn't it better, Governor Palin, to spend $700 billion helping middle-class families struggling with health care, housing, gas and groceries? ... Instead of helping these big financial institutions that played a role in creating this mess?

PALIN: Ultimately, what the bailout does is help those who are concerned about the health care reform that is needed to help shore up the economy-- Oh, it's got to be about job creation too. So health care reform and reducing taxes and reining in spending has got to accompany tax reductions.

Heartbeat away from the Presidency? Get real. This woman has no idea what she's talking about. We'll see how she performs on Thursday night.

"Reducing taxes... has got to accompany tax reductions."

@Ryan3k:

Yeah, what a utter shame; heard about that earlier. When you got conservatives demanding Palin to step down for the good of McCain's presidential bid, then you know you picked the wrong VP candidate.

It's pathetic to see how amateur and naïve Palin is.

I for one am really looking forward to the debate come Thursday.
