Basically... it just shows why fiat money is a BAD thing and why this bailout will bankrupt us all.

Hyperinflation has happened several times in our history, there is no reason it can't happen again.

Thanks to the $700 billion bailout (plus several billion more going to random shit), we'll likely be seeing some inflation.

For once I agree with the crazily exaggerated (but more importantly wrong), with cheesiesoda solely on the the fact that if you take the time to read through it all it will bankrupt the american people and their government and literally hand them right over into the hand of the "Federal Treasury" the funny thing is. If they need to give those companies 700 billion dollars... what happend to the 700 billion they had to replace? I guess some people earn a lot of money these days. The question is. If they broke the economy... why let the taxpayers pay for it? America had a strange logic. but well in germany there are also some discussions about aiding with a big bunch of money.

Our politicians are corporate whores. They give it up to the lobbyists, who end up giving them lots of money in exchange for even more taxpayer and Federal Reserve counterfiat money.
