Nice dodge for sure, there was a lot of power in the throw and it was well aimed. Applause for Mr Bush.

For those not in the know, hitting someone with one's shoes or throwing one's shoes at someone is among the worst insults in the Arab world. It is also considered horribly dishonorable to issue such an insult to a guest, regardless of how little one might like that guest, because of deeply-ingrained traditions of hospitality (which are not only codified in the Koran, but also part of long-standing pre-Islamic culture). So, on one hand, this guy is being praised for daring to give what-for to Mr. Bush- but on the other, he is also being denounced for violating the laws of hospitality and being about as rude as it is possible to be to a guest in his country.

It certainly is one of the more... unique things to happen to a US President overseas.

Barack Hussein Obama wouldn't have had to. His middle name puts a muslim anti-shoe defensive field around him.

By the way: Bad call turning down a vet during our time of greatest national threat, American voters.

Nobody has a right or responsibility to humiliate another. He didn't just insult the president, he insulted the americans killed defending his country against the very people who repressed his right to protest legally.

And for a little perspective:

It's both the highest insult a Muslim can deliver but at the same time a massively rude gesture. Hospitality is supposedly one of the facets of Islam, and by treating a guest in his own nation this way that reporter is being shunned by many Muslims.

Actually many Iraqis consider him a hero.

In Iraq it goes both ways, but I said Muslims, implying the more general Islamic faith.

you do understand that most muslims consider invading 2 countries for no reason and later causing the death 1,4+ million individuals and refugeeing 4+ million also disrespectful.

Not to speak about Sunnis and Shiites not being policed by anyone, which has created ethnic cleansing in most of Baghdad and other parts of Iraq. Mostly Sunnis as they're the minority.

but who gives a shit

bush certainly bears a big chunk of the mess caused, but islam arguably bears a bigger one; the vast majority of the violence in Iraq is muslims on muslims because of islam (the hatred between sunni and shia) and don't call it ethnic cleansing. it's not, it's religious cleansing.

Are you sure about that? I remember reading a poll in 2007 that said 62% of Iraqis actually supported attacks on U.S troops, and that 92% of Iraqis want the U.S to leave the country within a year (76% saying they should leave now)

Among Iraqis, Bush's only popular among the elite within the Green Zone in Baghdad as well as some elements of the government. But we all know that the Iraqi government is a joke at this point, as it has no effect on what goes on in the country, and is mostly dominated by Shia militias.

By the way, I doubt Barack Obama will be much different. Hussein or no Hussein.
