So it's pretty certain that had Westwood been given more time, they'd have come out with an expansion for Renegade. If not, well, it'd still have been nice to see. However, what do YOU think would have been in it?

I'd have to say a Nod mission, possibly following either Sakura, or an unnamed Nod hero-like guy that did various work unrelated to the GDI campaign.

What do you guys think/would like to have seen?

IIRC, Westwood was going to do a Nod Campaign but they were rushed.(I heard this somewhere else on this forum)

I've also heard they wanted to use modern-day weapons but, again, were rushed into releasing the game. ./

/me has no other support than to piggyback off what I've read on these forums

Yes, and yes. Anyways, I'm pretty sure an expansion would have just added the Nod campaign that WW didn't finish, and probably a handful of vehicles, maps, and maybe like two new guns.

I once had an idea to remake the whole campaign for nod, but I never did it to be honest...

I don't think they were going to do an expansion. It looks like they jumped right into C&C Renegade 2 after the first was released - according to one Westwood member, the game was mostly done.

Yes, I think they went straight to Renegade 2 but if they did do an expansion to C&C Renegade i think it would have had more missions like the Convert operations expansion to C&C95 like the mission called "blackout" where you had to take out the power. They may have also added more maps to multiplayer like their incomplete maps(the ones AircraftKiller finished after a while).
