That comes out to 20+ days straight of playing! The games only been out for less than 40 days, that means he spent half of every day playing renegade, (probably 75% of every waking hour, 12 hours a day on average) how is this possible and how does he have the time!!BTW- The ladder shows basically who played the most games, no who its the best players.. The more games and time you invest, the higher up the ladder you are... end of story ago! I'm in the mission where I have to escaped from prison. I did, except I get killed soon after leaving the prison. I destroyed the aircraft pad (or whatever they call it), but that's no use. All these Nod reinforcements keep on coming, and all these aircrafts too! No matter how hard I tried...Can someone out there help me, please...?

The ladder does, for the most part show who plays the most, but if you think about it the high ranking player play for a very long time and they must have some skill for playing so much. So the ladder sometimes helps you know who has some skill.

Don't try yo fight the Nod forces that are being airdropped outside the prison, they will just keep coming. Run to the right and up the high road to the first tunnel and cover your back trail. You should be able to fight your way to the research station from there. Stay on the high ground.

You will find that destroying everything in the prison will be useful. You should find quite a few GSI prisoners. When every Nod unit in the prison base is dead they will wait by the gate. Then you can release them and they will draw enemy fire. Then(sticking to low ground is surprisingly best) head forward and run for the tunnel. Once on the other side the Nod re-enforcements aren't a problem-they still appear behind you. Take out the turrets and go into the facility.

Upon releasing the prisoners, go to them and hit the activation key (usually E), the one you use to talk to people sometimes and do things like climbing ladders. I think you will have to pick up weapons and ammo first, in the room which is full of them (you know where it is, the same building). Then you will provide them with chainguns so that they can defend themselves and help you fight the Nods.

Thanks to everyone that answered my problem. I've finished my prison sentence (LOL) and free! I'm now in the Research Centre. I guess it's the secondary objective that asks people to destroy some controls. I destroyed one and trying to find my way to the others, and I'm lost... I will try again later on today to see if I can find the other one. Jason
