I think it was "Tomorrows World" that showed a similar technology with a spinal tap, it helped women acheive orgasm when previously they had never really enjoyed sex, or managed to climax.

The first women that tried it said that before using it she had never managed to reach climax through sexual penetration, but rather just rarely through foreplay and oral stimulation of the clitoris. This had affected her sex drive all her life.

After the trial perdioid ended and they had to take the impant out, she at first refused, then after they remind her of her contractual obligation she offered them several thousand pounds to keep the implant, or be the first person to get the next version which was supposed to be more discreet.

This first version had wires or something I remember coming out of her back (weird :S).

At the end of the day, I hate the idea of spinal taps and implants in my brain, but if I was faced with either that or I couldn't enjoy sex, I'd probably go for the brain implants and hope that didn't labotomise me.

Women don't have orgasm's because the men often don't last long enough, or they're selfish assholes.

They should make a chip that detunes male sex drive. I think that'd be way better for the world.

Would suck being a woman (pun not intended) because having sex but not being satisfied can be a bitch, especially if you have to DIY.

Good things will come out of it. Very good things. Hurah! for technology!
