try laying down more realistic textures, maybe a realistic door handle and gas tank cap. and since when are headlights black and windshields white? it looks like you just dragged the hue bar one way and didn't pay attention to all the other colors.

Proper texturing requires no knowledge of the W3d engine whatsoever aside from a dds plugin. The only problem with all of your work is that you absolutely put no effort into it whatsoever. Clicking a few buttons and messing with a few settings does not count.

Can I make a suggestion.

Don't post everything you make.

You're just starting out obviously, so it's good you're experimenting, but there are people here that take time to make it look the best it possibly be, almost to the point of obsessive compulsive, and you're just insulting all the work and time they put into something by just changing a few colors and thinking it's something new.

I'm not trying to bash you or anything, but everyone has to start somewhere.

Once you're done modeling or skinning something, take a step back, take a look at it, and say to yourself "Would I spend money on a game that has this in it?".

Dont just stop there, ask some friends what they think.

Once thats done, go back and take another look at it.

Then if you think that it is worthy, for sure post it!

But it looks like you have a long way to go to get any proper modeling or texturing that is worthy of peoples praise.

Keep it up, and don't let the nay-sayers on this forum get too you. But again, don't give them a reason to.

Ok let's clear everything up. It doesn't matter how much time you put into something. You have to make appealing skins. You can make valuable skins in less than a minute, but you have to know what your doing. Google search textures, re-texturing is a great way to start out.

Dude, take a chill pill and stop making yourself look the fool. Seriously.

2GLOCK9S wrote on Thu, 19 March 2009 15:09It doesn't matter how much time you put into something. You have to make appealing skins.

Exactly. It doesn't matter if you spent all day on something, the first skin I ever made was the Dragon Med Tank, and it took me 3 hours. But the reason why people like it isn't because it took me that long, it's because there's a dragon and flames on it in a visually appealing, non-Scrin-like manner, meaning it actually flows. It's like signature art, it needs to flow together otherwise it's pointless. It needs to have flow and structure, it needs to work well, etc, etc. Some people might not like it, some people may, but saying this is your best work is stupid, to me it looks like your worst, no offense.

I take back my last message. You don't deserve to learn if you're just gonna pull shit like that and claim it's an hour's work.

The point is the following ->

You keep saying you have done a lot of work and are showing us a picture of two cars. The sedan actually looks a bit nice.

The the following pops in my mind as for JsxKeule -> wait this is just a negatif which has been worked on for 5 min and common that pickup no offence just horrible.

This was just 2 minutes of work so GoodOneDriver please make something better and afterwards dont start saying I have worked hard on it will it is clear that making a skin negatif isn't that hard. (two clicks on a mouse).

I'm not saying negatif skins are a bad idea but the following the sedan is actually nice looking only I would use a magic want to get the windows back + headlights and that sort of stuff. You keep missing those details which arent hard to get into your skin.

Dont stop skinning with these skins but go a patch up that sedan you will see that you can get a lot more out of. And a small note stop saying you have put a lot time in work most people do but you multiply your used time into making a skin by x10.

If you're not willing to put in the required amount of work to make something worth downloading then maybe you should seriously consider finding another area to work on.

if you want stuff negative, the use the history brush tool to make the windows normal again, or select them and negative again..
