Is Renegade played largely by adults, teens, or kiddies without an Xbox?

I am 31, and I have formed a fairly large clan of gamers over 21. In fact, several of my clanmates served in Vietnam.

I am curious, when I see the swearing and the drug references in game, if I am talking to kids or what.

The game was rated M, correct? Can I assume that the majority of players now are smoking and drinking alcohol?

Curious is all.

Game was rated Teen. I've heard the average age of gamers is like 20 something though. But that's not necessarily for Renegade

(Bevis & Butthead laugh) huhu huhuu dude...he said bong.

Uhm ya -- I'm 22 (23 later this month) and like I've said many times I play OVER NIGHT. Good little kiddies shouldn't be playing Rene @ 4:20am () anyways so cursing/drug references/drugs+Rene shouldnt be an issue

19 - going on 20 in June. Not that i'm going to be getting much further then that. :eh:
I would have to say that there are a shit load of kids and teens playing this game. Most of them are ok, some just get on my nerves and others just piss me off.
Personally I like to sit down at two in the morning and play with the other insomniacs until sunrise.

There's definently a big difference when you're teamed up against or with people of reasonable age. They tend to be calmer, more organized & generally more experienced. For a reason of course, since many of them've probably been playing 3D FPS games for quite some time.

Naturally there are exceptions on both accounts but I do prefer a more mature crowd.

29, and I play whenever the baby isn't crying, my teenager isn't disobeying, my wife isn't complaining about Renegade, not working 12 hours a day, or the house doesn't need to be worked on. (An hour at night when everyone else is asleep.)

You know what? I want to win the lottery, but only so I can have time back. I just want to be comfortable, and play a bigger role in my kids lives. I don't need all the material things, I just want life to slow down.
