I've been following this 'supergroup' for a bit, and I'm pretty excited to hear the rest of their material.

If I were Eddie, I'd be frightened.

"Soap on a Rope" is very disappointing. The solo is decent, I suppose... better than you'd hear from most bands, but the song is so boring and doesn't even push any boundaries, even in the slightest. From a supergroup, you'd expect... more.

"Down the Drain" is considerably better, still boring, though. The second solo is actually impressive, something more along the lines you would expect from Satch. Still, I don't want to wait until 5 minutes into a song before I can even get into it.

They have been together for a year or two already. I heard when they first came out. The best person from all of the best bands all together!

Hardly, I'd only give Satriani that title. There are much better bands than RHCP and Van Halen, too. Oh, and Roth > Hagar.

I have the album on pre-order. Hopefully some decent sales will give Eddie the kick in the ass needed to start a new album that will let us forget about VHIII.
