<http://www.decisionengine.com/Default.html> - Microsoft is at it again, Bing is yet another search engine Microsoft is making, this one looks interesting imo, if it actually works how they are planning to it make it work it might be useful.

EDIT: Woz seems to be a fan:

<http://googleblog.blogspot.com/2009/05/went-walkabout-brought-back-google-wave.html> - This looks interesting imo.

Also if you haven't noticed Google has added something new to their search engine, while searching press "show options..." for some extra options

LOL @ bing tbh, very nice bug:

http://news.cnet.com/8301-19518_3-10258458-238.html?part=rss&subj=news&tag=2547-1_3-0-20searching for certain terms on Microsoft's new Bing.com search engine brings up videos that display hardcore porn within the Web site and because the porn is playing within Bing instead of the site where it's hosted, the videos are not necessarily blocked by parental control filters. And monitoring programs designed to tell parents where their kids have been are likely to simply report Bing.com instead of the site that actually hosts the video.

Do people actually use parental controls and such?

Most parents "try" to these days imo, most of the time though the kids are too smart for the parental controls

An unfortunate (18 year old) friend of mine still has her parents restricting her browsing... I don't see the point at that age, though...

Even if a lot of parents don't, would it get past filters at school and in work? (Assuming they have filters for porn sites but not bing).

Although, quite frankly, i would never wanna watch porn in school or work anyway.

Then she should move out of her parents house...
