Dutch - mother tongue
French - at school, but made it perfect by dating and later marrying a French speaking girl
English - learned at school, but made it much better thanks to communicating on the Internet
German - learned at school, was quite good at it actually but lost most of it now as I never use it anymore
Luxembourgish - I understand it partially, but cant really speak it. Learned it through my parents in law

Languages are a real strength in everything you do, except when you're a native English speaking: then you just need to make your English perfect don't expect an easy ride. there are a lot of rules to memorize about conjugations of verbs and special rules that may be confusing. It's because of this fact I won't be taking another language class unless I have to.

Not really, it's based on english so that made it easy to get a B in the class all three semesters despite not being able to remeber some of the rules. And I was typing "High German" before.

Madracks, your english is actually quite good for learning on the web.

It's not that simple, it's got annoying things like der, die and das, and using the precise word depending on the word to follow.

And then you got umlauts and all that.. It does get painful.

And also, you get things like, you don't go on a trip.. you make one..
