Me and my friend were having fun playing some defender/attacker games where a structure must be defended and I was thinking I should make a map.. This is just a comcept

there is no wf or airstrip, so it is inf only. GDI has a ton of AGT because they are the attackers, they aren't ment to be attacked at all, unless the team really, really sucks

Nod only has HON, pp and ref and a few turrets. Theres an overlook so snipers/gunners can shoot the HON, and tunnels similar to tunnels in C&C Snow.

the concept is simple. GDI has to take out the HON and they win. If the HON survives the allotted time, Nod wins. Players on Nod start out with a large amount of credits, lets say 5k and GDI start out with only 1k..

Whats everyone think? On a map where GDI is defending, the turrets and AGTs would be switched to guard towers and obbys if there's a KOTH i think there shouldn't be buildings at all. Like this:

Well instead of defending a hill, one team is attacking the other is defending Thats more like switched Offence and Defence instead of a KOTH.

You basicly changed the original game into a turn-based offence-defence game instead of a RT offence-defence

What i ment (i did say it quite stupid xD) is that in regular renegade you attack and defend at the same time.

All you actually did/want to do is changing it more to a sort of turn-based game where you change to the attack force or defensive force each round. That has nothing to do with KOTH.
