A dumb idiot posted this video:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xMNbxNSfX10>

You can see that he uses and AIMBOT on Renegade and the shit works fine. If you know him and if he is still playing, just ban.

I believe the released aimbots for renegade lock the camera to the bone position of the head, meaning that as Orca's style of shooting uses "free aim" (the reticle is moving freely inside the camera view, rather than the whole camera moving, think "v-sniping" with sniper weapons in APB/Reborn), it's not possible he was using an aimbot that has been released. I could be wrong, I never tried configuring the released aimbot too much...

To be fair guys, it does look kinda strange when you watch the movie.
There is no clear indication that he is cheating, however to someone not used to free-aim then I can understand it's a bit weird looking and could be confused with an aimbot.
I'm sure it's not the first time it crossed someones mind when watching it.
It seems like Orca is just a very good player.

I am kinda shocked by this accusation at Orca. He and his brother are very good snipers.

And again this whole incident shows how little people know about free aim. The other day I mentioned in-game that I use "free aim" and someone called me a hak lol

Reconfigure you V key to the right or left mouse button...and you are nearly unstoppable while as infantry. I have it on my right mouse button.

A lot many players don't know about freeaim and when they get killed quickly this way, they get doubts and post smart things like "hmmmm" in All Chat. lulz

I think you are refering to the reticle when in 3rd person. The dot in the middle tends to move around. It doesn't happen in 1st person view which is why I sometimes snipe in 1st person.

He isn't using cheats. It's called "free aim." When you're in 3rd person, press and hold V to move the reticule around the screen. People argue that it works better than having it centered in the middle.

I tend to use it a lot myself.

In Windows, open up the mouse configuration dialog box. You can then assign hotkeys to the buttons on the mouse. It might be that Renegade says they are Enter keys because that's what Windows says they are.

I know when I installed my mouse drivers, my scroll wheel was set to 'minimize.' So I'd try to scroll a web page, and it would go into my taskbar.

Thx that mouse does look good. My whole thing is my current mouse has a roller/third button but I don't like the feel of it.

I have a custom key setting saved where Q is secondary fire/scope. And right mouse button is free aim and left mouse button is primary. I use this only when say I join a server and feel like cracking some heads with a officer or am just teching on foot.

But when in vehicles, I go the default controls so I can use right mouse button for stank/mlrs/mammoth rockets.

It kinda gets annoying though switching between the 2 key settings while in-game but I am so used to it it doesn't really matter.

I have it configured via the logitech tool it comes with that is the thing. For instance my side buttons are set to forward and backward and my middle button is set to f5. None of them are set as escape yet that is what Ren sees them as. I use just about every button on my mouse for CoD (for example) and it works great. I'll have to check the windows settings - I thought the logitech settings over road the windows ones.

Hmm, usually when a game doesn't play nice with the extra buttons on my mouse I use the mouse's tool to reassign the buttons to some random key I rarely press like the brackets]].

If the game still won't acknowledge the mouse buttons when you try to configure your key settings in the game menu, try pressing the original key instead and then test it in-game? So instead of pressing mouse 3 to assign to free aim, press the [key (or whatever key you assign). Then see if it works in-game or not because the logitech signals should indeed overrule what Windows sees or what the game thinks it sees.

I haven't actually tried that because it never occurred to me to assign free aim to my extra mouse buttons because I rarely use it due to it messing up my strafes by taking the use of my index finger. In retrospect this is genius and I'm going to go do it now.

It is not possible to use free aim and cheat name removed in combination, thats why someone who is good at hugging cannot be cheating due to the free aim request to hug well.

I don't know anyone considered top 10 of all time who used that shit in the open...Simpee doesn't even use it when hugging in the tunnels (dummy) and he still fared rather well in sniper servers. If there's no wall to look&shoot over/past, there is no reason to use it...it's a crutch for people who just aren't good at aiming. I'm on your favorite player's list, AoW AND sniping...who the fuck are you two? I'd could probably still beat you 2v1 and I'm not talking sniping. I'll concede that several elite tunnel-snipers excessively used V, but those are guys that could never get good at scoping, let alone AoW clanwars.

I'm not saying using V all the time is good, either. It's actually pretty stupid as you end up not getting much of a view, but its uses are certainly not limited soley to hugging. Again, mid to long range, it can be handy. I used to actually be pretty decent at sniping and would be able to pop someone from a damn long distance without scoping, thanks to free aim.

You're aiming the wrong way, then...the twitchy way Renegade characters move makes it 100% impossible to lock onto an opponent who's dodging rapidly and it certainly is easier to adjust your crosshair with the help of your movement keys than solely with your mouse - you can't do the former with V. This works for all automatic weapons. Sniping is just a matter of predicting your opponent's movement and having him walk into your crosshair, plus the occasional flicker-shot on first contact.

This thread has been hijacked - now it's now officially about renforums misfits catching feelings because their skills were dissed. Baker&Lee 2v1 AoW? Whoever loses gets his account deleted...bring it, dweebs!
