Nah, there's definitely nerdier. And, I don't find Alyx to be all that hot, personally... And plus, he was kinda responsible for the whole end of the world scenario, and hasn't exactly save it yet... so, yeah, that's kinda why it's actually somewhat decent.

Lastly, the fact that he DOESN'T talk means we don't have to sit through 40 fucking hours of cutscenes about how love can bloom on the battlefield or some stupid shit.

Like what? I'm talking about the major franchises like Halo, HL, GoW, CoD,...

Halo's story is overrated as well...I just think as an achievement, the Half-Life franchise is a little overrated and Halo underrated by PC gamers. Half-Life games are still enjoyable, but nothing stands the test of time like Halo. Almost 9 years old and the Warthog's physics are still top of the foodchain and the AI makes every firefight unique (unlike Half-Life 2, which feels like a pattern of enemies storming at you).

Halo's story I haven't actually gotten into as I lack an xbox currently (I guess it's the only reason they could get the damn things to sell, no one would buy 'em otherwise initially).

And, it's really the other way around- I can't count how many kids haven't even heard of Half Life but know everything about Halo and Call of Duty. But yeah, Half Life 2's firefights kinda suck sometimes (although a few parts are nice).

One thing the Half Life series definitely has over Halo and other series though is ambiance. Halo (after playing a few games with friends and shit), doesn't really have as much of that atmosphere. Not to say it's nonexistent, but it's just not as apparent. It feels a bit more like generic sci fi stuff most of the time. Then again I haven't really played Halo 3's singleplayer, might be why, but still.

Gears of War is HURF DURF STARCRAFT AND WH40K MARINE RIPOFF HURR. ALSO GRAY.

Call of Duty is HURF DURF MARINES ETC. Nothing new there.

Now, again, I'm not really talking about the general gameplay or the "physics" as you seemed to have pointed out- I'm more or less talking about story and setting, which is what you initially criticized. Gameplay wise, yeah, Half Life's multiplayer sucks yada yada (personally I like the singleplayer gameplay though).

One complaint I have with the series though is the amount of cut content from Half Life 2 :[ they really coulda had some awesome shit, but ah well.

TL;DR: Half Life 2 is superior to most other franchises in terms of story, setting, and etc.

Ya, Half-Life's story is highly interesting... even though it's a cheap way to build suspense by explaining everything in tiny steps - Gears of War follows the same formula - unfortunately, I'm a sucker for that shit. I really like the setting and agree with what you're saying, but where Half-Life fucks up is the dialogue. Making Gordon mute messes up the immersion, the opposite of what Valve wanted to achieve, and you simply care less for the characters because there's no real connection, the whole Alyx developing feelings for Gordon angle feels so fabricated. I'm much more connected to the strong silent type heros like the Chief and Fenix that only talk when it's necessary.

Stop hating on Gears of War...it's Michael Bay, but it's Michael Bay at his best. CoD is Tom Clancy at his best, but I doubt those games are going to stand the test of time like HL, Halo and perhaps GoW.

When I was calling Half-Life overrated, I was strictly speaking of PC gamers...according to every review, they're these flawless landmark games. They're masterpieces, but they're far from flawless. Halo is flawed as well, but the 83 score it has on Metacritic is a travesty for an equally important landmark.

Halo's story is better than HL's. It's just a whole lot more epic and has more overall depth.

But people still like HL not because of the story, but because the dialogue and continuous first person perspective. HL really puts the player in the shoes of the main character, which is what makes it so addictive.

Halo's story is pretty shitty. It borrows heavily from almost anything you'd care to name. Nobody likes it's story, and if it wasn't the first halfway-decent console shooter, it would have been an utterly forgettable series.

You obviously haven't read any of the Halo books, which are 1000% better in any form then the game itself. The game to me (i only played 1st full, and some of the 2nd) was pretty bland, i agree with that, (prefer half life SP anyday) but saying that the story of Halo is crap... lol.

Lies. It's your generic hollywood crap. Not to say it's bad or poorly done- it has its charm. But it's definitely not better than Half Life 2's almost depressing atmosphere. And hey, it doesn't have to use constant shades of gray to make a sort of "down" environment.

How can you say it's generic hollywood crap if you haven't played all the games? The Master Chief finished the fight hollywood style, but the way the story unfolds isn't generic. Half-Life is going the Matrix route, which sets it up for failure Matrix style...time will tell.

Halo has a better story by default.

Half Life 2 barely has a story at all! The entire game being given little information, then getting from point A to point B to learn a little more information, then going from point B to point C.

The only reason why it's good is because of what I mentioned above.

You could probably put the entire HL2 story on 1 or 2 pages of paper it's so short. If you were to put Halo's story on paper, it would reach dozens. Maybe even into the hundreds.

---

Also, Halo isn't just about Master Chief. He's just some guy who ended the fight. The war goes on for decades before Master Chief is even born.

Halo's story is just a loose collection of clinches, and would fit in a paragraph, taunts include: Generic humans with power suits, supersoldiers, and space marines (Ooriginal!) are in a war against some hive minded aliens that infest people (Which are not rip-offs of the Zerg from StarCraft!) called "The Flood" (Totally not a synonym for "The Scourge"! ) that are controlled by an ugly-as-fuck creature called "The Gravemind" (Completely different from The Overmind from StarCraft!), and against a different alien society with wacko religious beliefs and a rigid caste system that's slowly leading to their demise (Not the Protoss, because they're bad guys lol!). Eventually, one of their Heroes who never shows his face narrowly saves the Earth by making some sacrifice and using (What turns out to be) good 'ol Human technology and ingenuity. Yawn.

You can go into more detail than that, but it would be like including every Hand of Nod that Havoc blows up in Renegade in a description of the C&C story.

Half Life doesn't have the sheer AMOUNT of story that the Halo series does (Probably because Valve aren't one-trick ponies and develop other series also, and Bungie don't), but they make up for it with an original plot and original gameplay. That's why Half-Life is consistently scored above Halo by basically every game critic who's opinion you'd care to take.

Looking for originality in Sci-Fi? OMG Half-Life ripped off Matrix, Star Wars, War of the Worlds and a whole lotta other shit...how generic! stfu

Half-Life series dialogue: 90% "Hello Gordon, let me help you!" 5% "Watch me fire up this protoion megadisplensor...yikes! I forgot to initiate stage 3!" 4% "Nice butt, Gordon." 1% "I'm the G-Man and I ordered the Matrix DVD set so that I could watch the scenes with the Oracle and the Architect over and over again."

Shit is weak and now their whole plot relies on Episode 3 delivering - otherwise the whole franchise's story will be exposed as a gimmick.

How are you gonna call Bungie one trick ponies when Marathon and Halo are two of the most highly rated and influential gaming series in history. What has Valve done that kept them from writing a proper story? Left 4 Dead? Yes, that's the pinnacle of originality. Portal? Clearly story-driven.

Halo (2001) 97
Halo 2 (2004) 95
Halo 3 (2007) 94
Halo 3: ODST (2009) 83

vs

Half-Life (1998) 96
Half-Life 2 (2004) 96
Half-Life 2: Episode One (2006) 87
Half-Life 2: Episode Two (2007) 90

Metacritic > your bullshit. Halo's DNA is found in practically every big budget FPS nowadays...must've been a very unoriginal game!

I can understand where your Valve bias is coming from, tho:

No, you misunderstood what I said, Dover.

Dialogue is not story. The Halo franchise spans over decades. It's like Star Wars in that you can pick a year and dive into a unique situation happening at that time.

HL2 Is nothing more than a journey of some guy across a long distance. It's a very short story elongated by large levels, intuitive gameplay and dialogue.

My point with the papes that I mentioned is this: if you were to cut out the gameplay from each of the games and just tell a story, you can go on for hours reciting Halo's story, were as HL2's story would just be "Dr. Freeman went here, then he went there."

It's not about story quality or cliches or anything of that nature. One story is simply bigger scale than the other one. That's what the word 'epic' means.

The bottom line:

Halo and HL are both good games and are fun to play... but they are good for entirely different reasons. HL isn't good because of its story, but because of its gameplay.

(Edit: That's not to say that HL's story is bad. It's just not it's main attraction.)

Well, the average age of a US gamer is 35 years old, and seeing as XBL requires the use of a credit card for subscription, and decent income for games, I figured the average age of a Halo player would actually be in their mid-twenties. :/

WoW isn't a game; It's a drug.

It's like heroin that causes obesity and lack of time.

I agree, it looks pretty fun however. I was thinking of trying it and stuff but it takes alot of time. I don't really have time for it, or at least not as much time that my sister puts into it.

Here's a link:

This stuff came out a couple months ago. Still, they only had about like, 550-some subjects, and they didn't include people under 19, so the number is easily skewed upwards. But I'd say late twenties, early 30's would be the average age, even with people under 19 included.

Nah, with people under 19 included, you'll be looking at something around 24/25...regardless, I doubt the average Halo gamers is considerably less mature than the average Half-Life gamer. After all, Counter-Strike players were considered the most immature group of misfits known to online gaming - not sure if they still are.

You guys should all know what C&C: Renegade is the best FPS ever made.

Also, JohnDoe, your trolling attempts are painful to watch. Try harder.
Gabe Newell and Dover picture comparison made me lol, though.

JohnDoe wrote on Thu, 26 November 2009 13:54Portal? Clearly story-driven. It actually ties in with the Half Life universe, and has more story than you'd think. It's just not 40 hours of cutscenes to make that story, which is one reason why it receives a lot of praise.

JohnDoe, enough is enough. I asked you before to stop stalking Dover and I reminded you in PM about our rules:

Also, please refrain from flaming other members. If you really must, keep it inside of the Hot Issues forum.

I'm sorry it has to come this far, as you've shown some decent input towards the discussions on these forums but this is no excuse for unwanted behaviour. 6 days ban with effect of today.
