what is the catch? will it still be hosted by you?
will someone have to pay the hosting fee after you sell it?
will you still be the admin on it?
Why are you selling it?
why would any one want to buy your site if they can make it them self?
i get the same as reborn.....

i sell the domain name.

I quitted with it because i have no time to work on it.

There were 200 unique visitors a day with a google ranking of 3 on it.

I ask people to PM me for the bidding.

You got to get your own hosting etc.
I will release the EPP code to the highest bidder.

Its only 20 USD.

You know that the ones that are interested could also just wait for the domain to expire and then register it for <7euros?

They wouldn't even need to wait long, or you'd have to invest in it yourself first (to buy it till 2011). Basically what you're trying to sell is a domainname that'll be online for 2,5 more months and after that it needs another <7euros investment.

I'd rather wait.

it was. when changing the DNS the ranking goes away.

Most of the people are paying for google stuff.

You have absolutly no idea what you are speaking about.

The site is down for 3months now, ofcourse google doesnt index it nomore.

And besides that, when it will expire there will be no chance to register it again.

The site is down for 3 months now, of course google doesn't index it anymore.

And besides that, when it will expire there will be no chance to register it again.

You're a downright liar and should therefore be banned. If a domain expires it can EASILY be registered again. How do you think domain hijacking takes place? People wait for it to be unregistered, for example when someone doesn't automatically renew it directly, and the moment it expires they buy the domain, to later sell it again (for shit loads of money) to the original owner who was just not paying attention.

Also, you're saying that google deletes the pagerank when the DNS expires. Then you're saying of course google doesn't index it any more when the site is down for 3 months. A site that's down does NOT HAVE A PAGERANK. You, however, smart as you think you are, set the domain to the website of your hoster, which DOES have the high pagerank only to be able to claim that your domain name has the high pagerank. Which is a blatant lie. The hoster's website has a pagerank of 3 (supposedly, as it cannot be verified).

Therefore we can conclude that you're trying to sell your domain for $2,5/12*7=33,6$ times the normal price of 7 euros (which you can find even cheaper!)

I say ban the conman and lock this topic!
