And you also had Patch, who isn't such a bad anti-infantry unit, anyways.

I never really get *ed due to a game because I have a life and it isn't a game anymore if you are getting angered with it, if that happens quit and cool off, it isn't a game anymore.

My record was pretty bad, and the opponents I played (which I always check) were far better than mine.. I thought I was doomed, but I was boiling from being dumped, and ended up winning. I'm not the kind that logs on every night and wins a few games. I take more losses than wins.

You've got it all wrong, if the game in question is thrilling enough to actually make you eager to win it's a * good game. All this "You don't have a life, I do." crap is just plain ridiculous.

I refuse to believe that. Action game? Fine you can argue that... Strategy game??? Never. Anger will definately not helped. That should go on the flukes post.

matches, and I attacked more often and earlier than I usually dare to attack. I used different playstyles to what I normally would have done, and took more risks. Either they screwed up, or I fluked it.

I dunno, when I get p!ssed off I lose concentration, screw up, and just get more p!ssed off. People are most dangerous calm and clear-headed, not fire-eyed and steaming.
