So a week or so ago, Spooky hs me with a stank on Islands in front of Bar. I was totally surprised and didn't even know stanks could do that. I always believed that the farther away a infantry is away from the stank, the greater the chances of the stank getting a hs kill. This is why I tried to go closer to his stank on that game to someone try to take away his "supposed" range advantage I thought he had. I was so damn wrong.

So I tried to imitate what he did in a few games and was surprised to get "easy" headshots against infantry. It funny too because 3 players I did it to accused me of either bighead or aimbot!

I am surprised when I killed a sbh on Mesa with a stolen stank when he was just a few feet away. I noticed that the missiles are homing too. I didn't know stank missiles tracked infantry.

somebody fill me in on this whole stank deal please!

What i think is that the stealth tank uses twin TOW missiles, like the AGT, and i belive why you can get suprising hs is because i think stanks are intened for preision attack.

Stank while cloaked = more time to target out an enemy
Stank while decloaked = just seconds to hit&run.

Yesterday I stole some guy's Stealth Tank on Complex in the middile tunnel. I drove toward my base, firing a shot in vain, managed to get a headshot kill.

Use secondary fire when shooting at infantry. If I'm not mistaken, like a flamer / MRL, secondary fire has different effects.

S/F on a stank tracks; or seems to when I do it anyway.

i was up on top of Under and fired a shot at a pic by the GDI entrance, he didn't move until almost the last second and it tracked his head and dropped him where he stood also, if you're trying to kill a stank don't jump because the rockets arc it will kill you if you're right on the thing but generally with left click they'll go over close targets

Primary fire one missile from each missile launcher, secondary only uses the left one for both missiles.
