While I'm sure you had a great time, I'm not so sure it is wise to post them here, in public. One day a possible employer might do a little searching on you, and I guess he doesn't like gambling addicts or cocaine users.

Lol.

On a serious note, what is more likely is that they will Google or Facebook (using site names as verbs FTW) his real name, and his online nickname may well be mentioned somewhere on his profile, they might then google that, and find this.

At any rate, all I've discovered is that users on cocaine are harder to moderate, stop taking it!

That indeed.

It doesn't necessarily happen, but it would be a pity if it would.

You would be surprised ive heard plenty of stories in this country where people have posted things on facebook like:

"OMG MY JOB FUCKING SUCKS!!!!!"

The next day they have no job because they have had other employees added to their facebook and its somehow reached their employers lol.

Just need to watch what you say in this day and age even behind the little anonymity that the internet gives.

Zeratul wrote on Mon, 21 June 2010 12:57in other news some people show up to work drunk on a daily bases and dont get fired

My first job was in a resturant where half the kitchen was high or drunk at work on a regular basis. The truck crew would meet in a cadillac in the parking lot to get high, then unload the truck. All the managers knew what was up in that car, a lot of times they would walk out there and talk to them. Granted it is not the best idea for a bunch of stoned people to push dollys through the kitchen it worked out.

I know it is not many people's dream to work in a resturant, but tbh that place was awesome to work at. Wasn't the best money, but it was enough to live on.
