When the game first starts on any map, go out in force as a unit. Squads have much more firepower than more than one person, and while one soldier with c-4 isnt a big deal, five soldiers with c-4 is. And when you do make it to your target stay with the c-4. The enemy cannot disarm the c-4 AND kill the three troopers left. I understand teamwork can be real hard to coordinate in this game, but if your team won't cooperate, just follow them to their goal and back up whatever they are doing, idiotic as it may seem. Blowing up a turret is better than nothing at all!

And another thing...If your team manages to get a tank in the field, back it up with another one! Suppressive fire is a wonderful thing. If they can't get out of thier base, how can they kill you? Back up your teammates. Noone can win any game alone, and no matter how well you do, if your team loses, YOU lose.

Many people do know this, but Kirby was just trying to be helpful. What are you trying to accomplish by flaming him? Nothing except a *ed off poster. I'm sure there are many newbies who read this forum who will find that information helpful to them, or maybe just inspiring. People need to shut their mouth and stop flaming.

Hmmmmm. This is frustrating. I also already know all of these things, but also know that after playing this game for three months, that no one uses these tactics. Think of this as a reminder when you think it's common sense. Common sense isn't that common guys as your flaming proves.Everyday tons of new people start playing this game and discover this forum, (which THIS "noob" has been reading since it came out) and I want to promote this game's good aspects. Who made you the renegade authorities?

Act of God is closer to the truth. Thats why I post "stupid topics". Maybe its because they just don't know any better. Most players have no concept of tactics and strategy, just blow stuff up. Which puts them soundly in the Noob category.
