We always do this for people who get banned. It's in a proud tradition dating back to the days of Havocman. Those are big shoes to fill!

It's a shame you had to go and be such a d-bag over this dead game.

You guys get so upset over messing around geez.
My family and I do that kinda stuff all the time.

Hahaha You look gay.. oh your funny.
How those fat cakes tasting?
....That's what she said.
Oh your making sausage for dinner... thought you had enough last night.

Jeeez, don't take offense so easily guys, most people are joking around.

You only think that because you weren't there on IRC to see this whole thing unfold. There was a lot more than a fat joke. That's just the punctuation mark on the whole thing.

Well, seeing as how this doesn't really show much, I'd like to see the entire thing.

Still a bit power trippy though? Fair enough ban him for the channel but to globally ban someone from the entire network cos he made fun of you or whatever is a bit OTT.

It may depend on your interpretation of "power trippy", I guess. After spending the better part of an hour trolling the channel, acting like a complete arrogant douche, a 5 minute network ban didn't seem so undeserved.

Network bans should in my opinion only be given for things that involve more than one channel. If it does involves one channel one can easily ban the person from just the channel.

The part that disturbs me the most was that it was a network BAN, I mean a kick is a lot less invasive than a ban, and would've probably get the message through anyway.

I'm just saying that it was a channel issue and a channel ban would have done the job. But whatever its ur network I'm just expressing my opinion.

Banning him from the channel wouldn't have stopped the private messages he was sending not only to me, but a few other channel members.
