I was able to squeeze in some time from the money making work and finish the deed and the deed is done.

Website

<http://www.dcomproductions.com/>

You will now have access to a 'DPDN' link via the main navigation to take you to the developer network forums where there are over 7,000 posts of resource information regarding the three subtitled items.

I still need 5 more likes to get a proper URL for Facebook so if you want to show your support:

<http://www.facebook.com/pages/DCOM-Productions/124860917594842>

For those of you with old accounts that do not work or need recovered, you can contact support here.

Also note that posts regarding Command and Conquer and/or Renegade outside of the legacy forums will be deleted immediately without notice.

Thank you,

David

Well, I really don't care for C&C or Renegade at all, however I do care about the community and people that were involved.

There are a lot of bright minds in the Renegade Community, but I quit seeing any value in Renegade, it is the people who were collectively a part of DPDN who worked hard at making a usable Lua script archive, providing each other helpful support, as well as supporting DCOM Productions when it first started. Though I no longer see any value in old deprecated item such as C&C Renegade, I still see value in bright individuals with strong talent, and passion for what they do. It is out of respect of the small community 'DPDN' that was built by such people, that I bring back the Renegade archives for them, and those who many a times had contacted me and made the request.
