Any reason why the server keeps going nuts? In the past week there's been several outages. Today's was at least three hours of downtime.

The server is having some serious issues. It picked a bad time because I just went out of town on vacation (and most recently this morning while I was on the damn plane). I'm not even sure exactly what's going on with it just yet. :\

I will most likely be moving the site to a better box that I have. I tried to save money by using a virtual dedicated server but it hasn't been at ALL stable.

I had to reboot it several times now, the Virtual Machine, as there is a mysql process that crashes all the available memory. I think there is a rogue script, or there simply isn't enough memory to run the script that is using the MySQL process as it froze up... It happens around the same time, i think it's a cron-job crash.

The box itself has been online for months, since the last great crash...
