We have pushed an update that temporarily removes the changes that we believe are the cause of all the problems. And we are going to work with various testers to find exactly where the problem is and fix it for good.

My apologies, this has been fixed.

What happened was this:

StealthEye initially said that I need to ship a build built so that it says "I am compatible with revision 4650". I build that and tested it by joining the TT 4.0 test server which is apparently running revision 4665 for reasons I don't know. So it said "hey, you are running revision 4650, you need revision 4665". So I made a build that said "I am compatible with revision 4665" and tested it and found it to work and shipped it not knowing that 4665 was not in fact the revision that all the other servers had.

If I had known the TT server wasn't actually running 4.0 beta 4 (but some build further on from that), I would not have made this mistake. My apologies for breaking things (and for not listening to StealthEye when he said the 4650 was the revision we needed).

What do you mean "keeps the issues"?

Also, to be clear, everyone should have a ttversion.txt file in their renegade folder that says
"Distributed as scripts-2012.03.19-r4650!4679.zip."

If you dont, you do NOT have the right version

New update still has the issues. I still freeze and have to reboot my computer. And I still get the FPS issues.

I had a crash a few hours ago (uploading it here).

But then after a restart, everything is all-right and I had some of the best games ever I played on Jelly Marathon with inf ammo lol. And whatever you did, Renegade is soooooooooo much smoother and slicker (and other players are saying the same). I had never seen Renegade play like it.

If there is anyone out there who experiences these problems (or rather was experiencing them before this new update), could reproduce them easily before the new build made them go away and has enough time to run tests, please send me a PM.
