I've been thinking about this recently. Did it ever once appear in your head that some players who are or were really experienced with the game have not decided to play Clan Wars because they don't have the time for it? Maybe they don't want to spend their time playing a video game competitively if they aren't gaining anything from playing? Some people might not be the competitive type of person.

What do you think?

The clan war players started in public too. They used to be noobs. Overtime, the players who started in '02 built up on their knowledge of the game, they became pros. The same thing can be applied to sports players. Michael Jordan started from being a joe to being a pro. He built up on his skill by practicing and learning the basics.

cant properly learn this game in a game with lots of people fucking around, uneven numbers of players, no tactics involved 95% of the time, barely any communication on the teams, and no overall teampay other than the occasional stank rush (if that can be called teampay)

yes

Public matches aren't REMOTELY as organized or REMOTELY as intense as clan wars. Everybody is on teamspeak, everybody knows exactly what to do, nobody wants to lose.

In pub nobody (or almost nobody is on ts), only a handful know what to do, most people play for fun and don't care about losing.

You can't expect the same challenge from that.

CW servers are the closest to real ren as you can get.

Yes the game was made for 16 vs 16, but cw players skills make top pub players look like they never played before.

Seriously I've played both, there is a huge difference in skill levels.

Fair point.

I used to do clan wars in CS and he's got a point.

Everything counts. there was formations, choice of weapons, different routes to the maps, who is carrying the bomb and what style of play does the bomnb carrier play?

I never got good at CS:S playing public matches, I just got better at public matches. Once the numbers died down I used to be shit cos skilled players would be better with small numbers, but I started playing clan wars with this guy and I got better with small numbers. You noticed things you never used to, foot steps, how to tell how much damage you did to a player that got away, better aiming techniques, better map routes, memorizing camp spots, using flash/smoke/grenades more effeciently etc.

After I got good (id say mid-ranged player) I got much better at public matches cos once the numbers went down, I'd play as if I was playing a 5 v 5 match, were as the rest of the team would be running around like headless chickens revealing themselvs on radar and basically letting me pick them off 1 at a time.

Same for Renegade, I used to be a decent public player but in small clan wars or 1v1's I was god awful. 15 v 15 or 5 v 5, different numbers, different strats. You can't argue this, most games prove this formula, unless your playing call of dooty: modern borfare, auto aim does the job for you.

I didn't even play the OS games but my experience is that is you play 8v8 where 4 players on one team are using *cheat name removed*you might as well not bother.

You can't argue that you can out tank them because you can't repair your tank without getting hs... you can't get in their base and hide.

I'm sorry but OS were a piece of shit, I'm sure they knew a fair bit but used to beat em 5 out of 5 in 2v2, with thier rgh.

In regards to the main argument, you can learn to tank and aim in public to high standards, you can't learn what to do and the perfect time to do it and that makes someone good, nothing else.

Aiming comes with time.

i am not saying cw.cc players suck. I think they are really good at Renegade. I am just suggesting that there are also good public players who don't warrant too much effort into this game when there is no real motive for them to do so. They just want to have fun nowadays. Yeah sure, you can prove that you are good at 2v2(or the other cw.cc matchups) competitive playing at 10 year old game. Sure, boost your ego and morale. But, that's it. Is that a big enough motive to join cw.cc? No, not really. Most people in the world who are competitive at their workplace are not competitive just because they want to boost their ego. No, they want to climb the hierarchy and get a better wage so they can buy fancy shit. Also, when most of the Renegade players have already left the game for other games, another reason why its not a good way to portray who is the best at a game based on who plays for cw.cc or not.

There are some very good players in public, Excellent aim with tanks and infantry, but they would not be good in cws.

Some of the best players I knew from clanwars were not the best at either aim or tanking (they were good enough).

They knew what to do and when to do it, that was all it took.

I had a 1v1 a few years back with some mouthy git from a public server on field.

He killed two of my arty's with a med and i was very surprised... he was more surprised when i fake nuked, snuck a stank out and killed his base (he died to my mines on his rush).

I won in a shitty shady way because he didn't understand tactics in 1v1s and thought his tank skills were good enough to win.

Hate fake nuking

You can say it is a smart tactic but i think its more of a bitchy move

The whole concept of bitchy moves, or "whoring" or gay moves is nonexistent in cws.

Either you are good and smart enough to win, or you are not.

are you even reading Hitman? i doubt it, because it looks like you're really just making shit up at this point fake beacons should not be disallowed

a casual player will never beat a competitive player in a competitive environment, ie clan wars, but that doesn't mean you won't outplay them in a casual environment (pub servers).

those games vs OS were just casual for most of the clan war players which goes a long way in explaining why after killing the ref on canyon 7/10 people bought havocs and went tunnel.
I'm sure the result would have been different if someone at the time had said that 5 years later those games would be used to judge the skill level of clan wars.

of course not, and at no point has anyone tried to make such a statement

why would a player that probably hasn't been exposed to small games be able to beat a player that obsessed over and practiced literally hundreds of small games? it's like putting some guy that wins a lot of bar fights against some UFC fighter in a cage match

i quite seriously doubt cw.cc would play casually in any organized match, but your opinion can differ from my own

the thing that was being contested was Hitman saying "Players are not good at anything unless they have played clan wars"

even simpee said the opposite of you hitman, but i have a feeling you'll say the same exact shit again in the future as you have so many times in the past with the current state of ren, I can count all the cw players who still somewhat play on two hands and everyone can pretty much win 25v25 matches on their own nP

It wouldn't be a 25v25 match then would it?

Laotian ellipsis looks like the hardest one to make

I mean just look at it, you like have to draw a circle, then you need that curvy line, and then you have to make a straight line. That's 3 different motions...

Clearly it's much more difficult than ours.
