Thanks for the startup type tip. I'd done the first part as instructed by a website, but the second part (your tip) will apparently keep me from having to redo that step every time I use my PC. Cool.

Also, for those who don't know, and who have a ton of things opening when they start up, click start, run, type msconfig. Go to the Startup Tab and unselect unwanted items.

I always do that so I have nothing running at startup.
