

Lots of people are asking what this "TSR" is that I am working on. Similar to BR, I had an idea and vision of the way "things should be" in regards to integrating TeamSpeak with Renegade, but just like Renegade, the server did not support the commands or procedures necessary to make it happen.

Fortunately, the TeamSpeak developers are wonderful folks who actually listen to feature requests. I submitted requests to add a feature to allow the server to force teamspeak players into a password-protected channel, and commands for listing players and what channels they were in. They have currently added the features I asked for in the latest development build, and TSR is now possible!

What is TSR?

TSR is a server-side application that monitors both the Renegade FDS logfile and TeamSpeak server logfile. TSR has code which allows it to interface with the Teamspeak server (and FDS) to execute commands on said servers. TSR also has an option to place a "Bot" on IRC for administrative monitoring and control.

What benefit is TSR to players? What does it do?

TSR's main function is to automatically sort players logged into the Teamspeak server into their respective GDI and Nod voice channels. If a player switches teams, or is remixed at the end of a map, TSR will automatically move them into the proper channel. TSR will optionally broadcast to the FDS (on command or timed interval) the number of/which players using voice communication.

How does it work?

TSR, using the same code and method as BR, keeps in memory the Renegade FDS player names, IPs, & teams. It also keeps a list of the names, IPs, & channels of the people logged into teamspeak. Anytime the following happens:

1. Player joins Renegade
2. Player joins Teamspeak
3. Team Switch
4. Team Remix

TSR compares the TS login data with the FDS login data. It then places them into the proper channel (GDI or Nod).

What about people pretending to be someone else, like registering the TS name "Tankcmdr6" etc?

To thwart this the TS server is setup to ONLY ALLOW REGISTERED LOGINS. This means if you do not already have an account, you cannot connect to the Teamspeak server. To create an account players will page the FDS host with "tspass <password>". TSR will then create an account for them using their WOL name and password specified. This will ensure that everyones TS name matches their WOL name, and nobody can masquerade as someone else. This is also required to handle situations where multiple people play/login from the same IP (like Crimson and I) ... with the IPs being the same, the only way to tell "who is who" is if their TS name matches their WOL name.

Won't TeamSpeak slow down my server or negatively impact bandwidth?

TeamSpeak uses ZERO bandwidth when nobody is talking. Even with the high quality codecs, it uses very little. You of course have the option to use the lower quality codecs like CELP 5.1 which are but a drop in the bucket even at full utilization.

I don't want a bunch of people connected to my server chit-chatting about who knows what. The default setup for TSR is for the server to be game-only. In other words, if you are not in the game, you cannot be in the server. I will have other options such as a grace period, where when people join they have 1-3 mins to login to the FDS or be booted. This will ensure the server is used for game-chat only. If you WANT to have a social channel that is except from the nazi rules, I can add options for that too, let me know.

What the heck is "PERL" anyway, why not make it a cool GUI prog?

Being a "Unix Guy", PERL is my native language I have zero experience coding in Visual Basic or Visual C++, which is why I enlisted Dantes help in the creation of BR. I know how to program and can flowchart pseudocode, but I do not have knowledge of the syntax or experience to make a VB application. PERL is powerful in dealing with any kind of text manipulation, which is exactly the bulk of BR/TSR's processing. I'm making every effort to make TSR work under windows, in fact I am developing it in a win32 environment, and so far its working great, using only 4M of memory and no discernable CPU usage. Beta testing on larger servers will provide more data for realworld statistics.

What about abusive people (playing music, static, swearing etc)?

TSR can have moderators, who via IRC or in-game (/page server command) will have the power to devoice, kick, or ban people depending on their moderator access level. Although voice communication software has been around for quite some time, apparently many people are not accustomed to using it, and often mistakenly use "voice activated" mode (always use PUSH-TO-TALK mode!), with the threshold set too sensitive, and you get a lot of "darth vaders". I am going to submit another feature request to enforce push-to-talk mode, but I don't know if they will be receptive to it or not.

Any other questions, just post them here.

forsakenYeah this will be quite interesting. What is this programs ETA? Like so we will have to update our TS with this new stuff for TSR to work right?

Pretty much the only thing you will have to do to TS itself is set it up so that only registered users can connect. Once I'm done with most of the coding and beta testing, I will put together as user-friendly an install package as I can, including screenshots and whatnot.

As for the ETA, I would say that TSR is 80% complete. Right now it parses the renegade and teamspeak logfiles, responds to certain pages from WOL, and the IRC interface is working. Next on my ToDo list is:

1. Defining and coding some administrative IRC commands with formatted output. Right now from IRC I basically have full control over the TS interface...anyone who has +v in the channel does...not good
2. Administrator/Moderator recognition. I don't like the setup of having a +m channel and anyone who can talk can control the bot, so I intend to have it recognize user@host masks and maybe an additional password login as well.
3. Selective formatting of the teamspeak server log. Right now it shows everything, like when people connect or disconnect it has their IP address etc. I will make it so that users IPs are not displayed in the IRC channel...or, if the IRC channel is ONLY for admins/mods, perhaps it should?

We will work all this out as the code matures

4. Adding code so that moderators can control TS from within renegade. This will be relatively easy since I have access to the renegade logfile. I'm thinking people can type or page the server with "!ts<command> ", such as "!tskick Blazer playing music".

5. More more more...there is always more

Okay I have been up all night coding, and TSR is now 90% complete. All of its functionality is working. When someone joins TS, they are restricted to the default channel. If they join the Renegade server, they are automagically moved to the proper Nod or GDI channel. If they switch teams, they are moved to the other team channel. If they quit, they are moved back to the default channel.

So now basically I have to clean up the code and add features. So far I have added code such that when players join the server TSR announces that they are using Voice Comm. Also if players type !ts, TSR reports how many/which players are using Voice Comm.

I'm really excited about TSR, and so no reason why I cannot adapt it for other games like BF1942, UT2K3, etc. Pretty much any game where the server has some external (logfile, telnet interface, web) method of getting a playerlist can be adapted.

TSR LIVES!

Blazer im with you all the way, one of my favorite parts of HL: Day Of Defeat is the voice program. Although I have found a way to adapt the program "voice tweak" to renegade it would be impossible to destribute it to everyone in the renegade community and i would probably break a couple copy right laws also.

He has a bot on IRC, probably the prerelease version of TSR, which shows him who connects and disconnects from the n00bstories TeamSpeak server. Plus, he's connects to TeamSpeak himself and can see from there.

Maybe a poll should be generated to see who would find it useful, if there's any doubt as to the numbers.

This (and the other things) is the reason why I do believe that the Renegade Community is one of the biggest Game Communities who are developing additional programs, maps and such things for their favourite Game...

Can TSR also be used without BR (only FDS and TSR on 1 machine)???

The software that teamspeak server owners need to use to make this work has not been publically released. There are a few existing Teamspeak servers that do actually work like this already due to the server owners own hard work, however it is not common. From the sound of it, I would suggest trying ts.black-intel.net and ts.n00bstories.com.

When I have wrapped up some existing projects, I will work on a public release version of this, so that all server owners may offer this to there players.

No worries. I'm really enjoying it to be honest. It's not super hard to make (especially seeing as I am using jnz's TCPsocket class he released. That guy never fails to deliver!
I've learned quite allot about string along the way too, it's been kinda fun making it so far...
It's also been a nice motivation knowing that I remember this thread being posted originally (and the various other threads that was created about it too), and I remember thinking to myself "Wow, this dude must know what he's doing..! Not only is he modding renegade, but he's got two programs that are un-related to talk to to eachother!". I actually remember thinking that I wish I knew how to do that stuff. I was sitting there, having played around with level edit thinking, shit man... I could never do that.

Ofcourse, I am not trying to make out like this is something super hard, because now I have some small grasp of programming, I realise that's it's a pretty small task in reality. I just remember at the time, I thought it was a big deal.

Writing it now, and seeing it working in-front of me is something of a small personal triumph.

It's going well too, the ini file for configuration is growing...

Quote:

;tsr.dll config file
;Most options have a brief description of how to configure them.
;Most other plug-in's settings load on the level_load event, meaning each map the settings are reloaded.
;Due to the nature of this plug-in, I have moved the settings load function to the primary load of the plug-in.
;This means settings are loaded once, and they are loaded before the very first map has even started.
;The only down side to this is that you cannot change the settings of this plug-in without a server restart.

; A big thanks has to go out to jnz for the release of his TCPsocket class on http://www.dcomproductions.com/
; As always, he's been a massive help, mentor and above all else, a friend.

;Most server owners will have there TS server on the same Server PC as there FDS. However, this option allows you to ;run the TS server on another server, and still have the FDS remotely administrate it. Pretty cool, huh?!
;Default IP below is 127.0.0.1, which is the loop back address. If your TS server is on the same PC as the FDS, leave this as it is.
TeamSpeakServerIP=127.0.0.1

;This is the "TCPQueryPort" defined in the teamspeak server server.ini file located in the prgrams directory of Teamspeak.

;This is NOT to be confused with the UDP port that the TeamSpeak server uses.

TeamSpeakTCPport=51234

;This is the password for the Teamspeak SuperAdmin account. This is the account that will be used to administrate the TS server.

;You can find this password if you do not know it in your server.log file when you installed your TS server.

SAPassword=46ku5p

;UDP port of the server

TeamSpeakUDPport=8767

;This setting if turned on will send message in-game (if there are any players that is) is explaining a little about the plug-in

;You may find after a while that this can be turned off, but it will help keep questions down in the beginning.

EnableExplanationMessages=true

;This string is what is used in the messages that are sent in-game explaining that the TSR plug-in is on your server

;You obviously need to change this setting to your own teamspeak server address (or IP if you're lame).

TeamSpeakAddress=TS.MP-Gaming.COM

;The names below should be the EXACT name of the channel in TeamSpeak you wish to use for the two teams.

;You can call them whatever you wish, but make sure the name of the channel in TeamSpeak is copied here perfectly!

;This is for the channel that will contain players of team type 1. Team 1 is GDI. In the case of renalert, this would be Allies. The "good guys".

ChannelName1=GDI

;This is the channel that should contain all the players of team type 0. 0 is Nod, or Soviets for renalert.

ChannelName2=Nod

I always enjoy seeing people work on their project, not first bragging about it and in the meanwhile never finishing it. No real need for a lot of fuzz, just make the fuzz when you know you can finish it Anyway, you're doing a nice job. Hell, if you wanted I'm sure you could make a plugin which would work with TS, ventrilo and even mumble!

I know from Ventrilo that it supports (parts of) the RCON protocol. I'm not to sure about mumble, but at least that is open source

I still wish that you would've joined the BlackIntel coding team years back when we asked you. Oh well, you're doing fine anyway

If there is a real need for a vent or mumble plug-in, I might make one for them too. I know allot of other games seem to use vent, but from my understanding most renegade servers lean towards TeamSpeak. It certainly might be interesting to take a look though!

I'm pretty sure I said back then that I would not be of any benefit to the team, and sadly, the same is still true today...

On some rare occassions people assume I know what I'm doing, and whilst over a few years I have learned quite a bit, I am still far from knowing what I am doing.

I believe I would be more of a hinderance to the team, than actually being any good, constantly asking questions and slowing others down...

This isn't false modesty, it's just a sad truth. I have been privvy to be able to look at some of Seye's code. While I understand it for the most part, I can read it I mean... To write it in the first place is beyond me.

Besides, I think I work better on my own, and at my own pace. I know my own limits, and try to take on projects that I know I will enjoy doing, which gives me a motivation to finish. I can't let anyone down but myself that way, either.

Although, I do very much appreciate the vote of confidence, and the level of trust the offer implies.

Hmm, personally I have a feeling that you underestimate yourself. Anyway, what we need the most as BI right now is our IRC stuff finished, which according to seye isn't particularly difficult in it self, just takes a lot of his rare free time which he prefers to use for TT. If you're interested in picking it up, you'd be more than welcome.

Also, from what I heard from Seye, he isn't really bothered when you ask something. This because 2 reasons, one is that you generally think before you ask and two is that you are a nice person which enjoys working hard for little to no personal gain.

Oh and on the mumble/ventrilo, we're currently using both . We're planning on switching to mumble completely when our ventrilo contract ends.
