The only thing that would have encouraged EA to make a sequel is solid sales of the original. No amount of signatures are going to convince them otherwise.

Do you really think that everyone that signed would actually buy a sequel if they made it? I don't.

i hate math.
And emcomics.

Think about it
The average game cost 50-60$
they would need to hit at least 6000 to make a good profit.
2500 x 50 - 125,000. which might be as much as the engine and staff cost.
and the thing that they need to make it work for windows from microsoft is a Stupid number!
:twisted:

EA would already have the windows thing paid..... and you would think they would sell enough to make a profit

The man said it. Decisions like that are made based on SALES. No petition, no matter how large, will EVER convince a game company to make a sequel to a game that did not sell enough copies to warrant one.

I am not signing, it is a waste of time.

It will, the idea behind a petition is to convince the company that there are enough people willing to buy this game, thus then they can make a sales based calculation on whether it would be worth any money or just not be worth the bother.

Thus they are not so stupid to make a choice based on one type of calculation, although you may not think it EA does respect the fans and they know without them their games wouldn't sell at all.

2000 ppl or however many people signed it now will make no difference.

Now 2 Million would probably guarantee the game's release .

So everybody go sign 1000 times....

I want it to come out but what chance does it have in the market now? Halo PC port, Half-life 2, and Doom 3 will take control of the FPS market. Unless they plan on making Ren2 a few years from now I just don't see it happening.

Bah, who needs it? We already have Reborn and RenAlert coming out, as well as a WWII mod and I-don't-know-what-else. I'm sure someone will do a Generals conversion someday. Who needs Renegade 2 when we have all these awesome FREE mods, made by people who will actually SUPPORT them?

This is completely pointless, what we should be doing is signing a petition to have them release the source code.

They did release some of the existing Renegade 2 assets a while back

Then what build it ourseleves?

Serious copyright problems there and not to mention the fact that we are not aswell asseted as a multi-million dollar company.

If thats not what you meant what do you mean by that?

Exactly. Open-Source is the only way Renegade can survive. I mean, how many times can you modify and improve on a closed-source proprietary game?

EA can always make thier own Free Software license like Netscape did with the NPL.

(n00b question)

whats it mean open source, dose that make it leagle to edit the exe file and make it into a patch like ren alert is doing without paying money to EA?

Infinint(n00b question)

No. Open Source means, that it's open source. You get the "GPL'd" source code of Renegade, you can edit anything and everything you want. But you have to make available your newly modified source code to anyone who asks (Part of the licence). If you don't want to do that, you have to pay them. You also can't sell it unless you purchase a licence to do so.

And, Renegade Alert is not a patch, or even an addon for Renegade. Renegade Alert is just a mod that is being distributed and implemented as an expansion pack to Renegade. (And the Ren Alert team is not paying EA anything to make the mod.)
