:eh:

I see 3 possibilities:

1. That's pure bullshit.
2. They really got that release date fucked.
3. It was a sleeper.

I highly doubt my 3rd one though.

Maybe Renegade was just moved to EA's "Classics" Titles... you know the boxes with the gold banner across the top or bottom and making it bargain bin priced?

yeah ^

EA likes to re-package games and throw in "CLASSIC" just so the game can be priced down and re-boxed to look new and thrown into the bargain bin at wal-mart so more 9 year olds point the cool looking box out to their parents and take it home and try to install it onto their pentium 133 mmx argh.

just like how Virgin used to re-package C&C and call it "WHITE LABEL" and make a new fancy box and price it down to $9.99

England, actually, Tech Support is good.

It's the community support and long lasting game support that is lacking, to say the least.

The tech support itself is good, very good even.... I'm referring to the actual support department that helps out with technical stuff. Never had a problem with them, always helpful... if you know how to use it. Heh....

Anyway, the Classic is just a very low priced re-release of the game. 8.99 Pounds according to a UK site.

That's good, maybe there will be an influx of new Renegade players to the community.

Now we just need them to be recieved well by the current community... new mappers, modders, skimmers, whatever....

Hehe.... Time to do some PR work for Renegade.

Not really... Most of EA's games become a "CLASSIC" title at some point, especially all the EASports titles. (That's when they are affordable lol).
